

Chevrolet connecting rods are matched in sets of six to within one-quarter ounce, and are individually fitted by hand to the crankshaft. Bearings are of babbit metal cast into the rods under heavy air pressure and at 200 degrees Fahrenheit.

Possessing the basic goodness of sound design and fine manufacture

From the selection of raw materials to the completion of the finished Chevrolet product, each process of building, assembling and checking the Chevrolet Six is marked by extreme care and precision. An exhaustive system of test and inspection makes certain that every part meets specified dimensions exactly. Many of these parts are held to limits of one ten-thousandth of an inch. No manufacturer in the industry uses more care or precision in building and testing than Chevrolet.

Just as every part of the car is soundly built, every feature is soundly designed.

In planning the motor, Chevrolet engineers were not content to offer the public anything less than tried and proved design. They knew that the only satisfactory way to get smooth, flexible power in a car is to use at least six cylinders. So they adopted the six-cylinder engine without compromise. And this is what you get in today's Chevrolet Six.

As a result of this sound designing and sound manufacturing, you can buy a Chevrolet and know you are getting a genuinely good automobile—

soundly designed, soundly built, basically and technically right.

The road men have graded the county road from Midway east to the town hall corner; the road will be in much better condition for winter except the bottom, down past Will Kaczor's, and that needs widening badly as it is hard to see a car coming from either direction and also is almost impossible for two cars to meet and pass in some places down through there; those who travel this road a good deal are hoping that the county commissioners will see that it is done before the ground is frozen this fall.
