TRICKS of MAGIC EXPLAINED by Will L. Lindhorst

FILLING TOBACCO CAN TWICE WITHOUT EMPTYING FIRST CONTENTS

A flat, curved tobacco can like the one in the above drawing must be used for this trick. After the can is filled with water, the performer places the first two fingers of each hand inside the can on both sides and pulls the sides apart, changing the can from concave into a circular shape. As the can is spread apart the water inside will be lowered until the can is slightly over half filled. It will then be possible to pour almost as much again into the can without the water overflowing. Although the square-inch surface of tin in the can does not increase by pulling the sides apart, the space will be almost doubled. It would take too much space to explain the reason for this, so the reader will have to figure it out for himself.

TAKING A COIN FROM UNDER HAT WITHOUT TOUCHING HAT

There is no illusion or magic connected with this trick. It is merely intended for a little fun. Place a coin under a hat and announce that you will bring the coin forth without lifting the hat. Make a few hypnotic passes over the hat, close your hand, and tell the onlookers that you have the coin in your hand. Some curious person will lift the hat and find the coin still in its original position. You then pick the coin up and you will have taken it from under the hat without lifting the hat. The idea is that somebody else, not you, lifts the hat.

HOW A CHILD CAN STEP THROUGH A PLAYING CARD

It is possible for an average-sized child or a small adult to step through a playing card. Get a good quality linen card, mark it like the above drawing and cut it along the marked lines. You will then be able to spread it apart and there should be ample room for a child to pass through. As the edges of the card remain intact, it can be said that little Johnny or Mary has actually stepped through the card, much in the manner that animals jump through paper hoops in a circus.

That question is asked by many passengers riding for the first time on the Chicago and North Western Railway, or by those patrons who suddenly realize that the "extra" track or tracks seen out the window are on the right; and it's not strange that conductors, trainmen and information clerks are asked that question daily, for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway is the only left-hand operated railway in the United States.

The answer is easy. It was no builder's whim that started the North Western double-tracking for left-hand operation nor superstition that kept the system from being changed, it was because most United States railroads were operated that way in the 19th century and the North Western didn't find sufficient reasons for changing when the others did.

Double Tracking Started in 1855

When the railroads of the country first started building lines many of them were financed by English and Dutch capital. The Galena and Chicago Union Railway, parent road of the Chicago and North Western Railway, was one of these. English and Dutch engineers were schooled in left-hand operation and built all roads for that system. Consequently, when double-tracking was started on what is now the Galena Division of the North Western towards Oak Park and West Chicago in 1855, switches and equipment were designed for operation opposite to the right hand system practiced on other railroads of the United States today. By 1882 double-tracking had been started on all three suburban divisions of the road in what is known as the Chicago suburban territory.
