Capt. Dollar, with a background of eighty odd years and a ripe experience, tells us the way to succeed is to keep hard at work. He's not telling anybody where to find a job.

Since the passing of the late W. J., the influence of western democrats is with their brethren in the east and delegates selected for the big convention are regularly instructed for the gentleman from New York.

In the recent presidential election in Germany, 780,963 more votes were polled than at the last presidential election in the United States, which has 58 million more population. Maybe the people in this country feel that the candidates are not worth voting for.

If the assessors are able to put into effect the 15 per cent reduction in valuations and the levies are not raised to offset the reduction a substantial move will be made toward tax reduction. If the reduction is made, government budgets can be lowered accordingly.

Governor Bryan is bringing a bit of cheer to western Nebraska people by visiting in various counties and meeting the citizens at the local community center—the school house. Mr. Bryan is a wily politician and can spread it on as thick as the next one at the country gatherings.

Mr. Griswold of Gordon, seeking the republican nomination for governor, calls attention to the historical coincidence that for 20 of the last 22 years Nebraska's governor came from the congressional district comprising the southeast corner of the state. It is of no particular significance which corner of the state a candidate hails from as far as having a bearing on his ability as a governor. The first consideration party managers will have in mind selecting a candidate at the primary will be, can he be elected?

Perhaps one good way of reducing the cost of the federal government would be to reduce the number of representatives in congress. It is nearly impossible for about 500 men who come from different sections of a large country, where there are many different modes of living, and who are old enough to be more or less set in their line of thought, to get together on any useful legislation. If the number could be reduced to about 100 the business would move faster and it would be easier to get beneficial legislation, instead of a mess of foolish compromises.

No public official whose term expires this year is secure in his office. A flood of candidates have arisen. In times of financial distress and industrial lethargy men's minds turn to politics. Hoover has the Iowa delegation but Mr. Brookhart has a battle on to retain his seat in the senate. From the senate down to village clerk there is a grand scramble for office. During prosperous periods no one has time to bother with politics, but a lot of them now have masterpieces of statesmanship, through most of us suspect the intriguing element is the emoluments of office.

The "solid south" is all right to rely upon as a locality to roll up the votes, but not as a place to furnish presidents.

Captain Robert Dollar, the 88 year old dean of American shipping men says, "the world is a fine place to live if you want to work." There are eight million jobless who might find it hard to believe.

Mrs. Luella Parker, County Superintendent was in charge of the sale of Christmas seals in this county for the Nebraska Tuberculosis association. The citizens of Nebraska purchased $30,245.73 worth of Christmas Seals. Fifty per cent of the money raised from the seal sale stays in the community where the seals were sold for tuberculosis prevention and health work.

ANNOUNCEMENT

To the voters:
In again presenting my name for your consideration as a candidate for District Judge of this district, I am doing so in furtherance of my own ambition, as well as in response to the earnest solicitation of many others throughout the district.

There seems to be a general sentiment in the district that 21 years in the office ought to be sufficient to gratify the most ardent ambitions of anyone, and that the term of office of District Judge should not be for life, regardless of the qualifications of the incumbent.

Many voters also feel that there should be a change in the location of the judgeship. For the past 45 years the District Judge has been elected from the same town, and even in Holt county there are many who consider that other parts of the district are entitled to recognition.

As to my qualifications and fitness, I shall have to refer you to others than myself. I will say, however, that I have resided in Ainsworth continuously for 42 years, and have been engaged in the active practice of the law for the past 32 years.

If you believe that public office should not be one man's life job, and if you feel, as many do in this district, that there should be a change, I ask that you support my candidacy.

Respectfully,
WILLIAM M. ELY.

Viewed From Another Angle

Writing from somewhere, a harassed business man unburdens himself this way in an Omaha paper and sign his name J. L. Hanna:

At the risk of being called heartless and unreasonable or worse, I would like to apply a little "logic" and try to make consistency out of the present farmers' relief or drouth relief activities now so constantly appearing in your daily publication. I once lived on a farm—or tried to, but four years ago I invested all I had in a "corner business." The construction of a fine paved road about three blocks from my corner ruined my business—pulled the traffic away. The "depression" did the rest. Under conditions I could not control and circumstances unforeseen my business judgment, as good as any farmer's, came to roost—and there wasn't any home.

Did I dress in sack cloth and ashes and wail to the world and its organizations to donate and donate and give to me? Could I help it if my business failed and "rain" refused to fall on me? Did anybody have pity on me because my stock was dying on my shelves and my family was growing hollow-eyed from want and worry? Did the Chamber of Commerce head a donation or form a committee to aid me and my kind? They did not. They sent a man down—without a word—who closed the door so fast it all but caught my coat tail as I went out.

In desperation I went to my father-in-law, a very generous old Scotchman (with advice). After I explained the situation to him he presented me with this tough bit of wisdom, "Hell, if you can't do that why not try something else?"

I do not decry charity and I have every sympathy in the world for those who suffer or are in want. But it seems to me that if there is any joy in the "jewel of consistency" a little bit of hard reasoning might help the situation which those drouth sufferers face—if it isn't too late. Call me "Hard Hearted Hanna" for this but, if conditions have made a desert out of the farms in that section of the state and rain won't fall and grasshoppers thrive, and the cows lay down and die, let the Scotchman's advice sink in and "try something else."

I had to give up my bit of "desert corner" and my home and my furniture—and even scatter my family—and give them up to relatives. I couldn't borrow a dime nor find a job. The cost of a carload of that donated hay might have kept me off the rocks and saved my "stock," but I wasn't a farmer. I was engaged in an occupation just as honorable and for the same purpose as our good farmers. That great gag about the "feeding of the world" attributed to the farmers sounds fine as a collection appeal, but hard facts say that a farmer is working for himself, scheming, planning, working to make $1.23 out of $1 and getting the necessities and luxuries of life as fast as he can grab them even as you or I.

I don't like charity. I don't want the dole, but a man in "store clothes" can get just as hungry as a farmer or the farmer's cow, and how many "city fellers" with their backs to the wall, with their business "on the rocks" can get a newspaper to publish an appeal every issue for 45 days for nothing to help them and their stock? To feed their families and help them carry on?
