BATTLE FLAG BORN OF PRESSING NEED

The best-known standard of the Confederacy, the famous battle flag, was unofficial in its origin. It was created by the army itself as a result of an incident which demonstrated clearly the need for a distinctive emblem, writes Anne McCorkle in the Baltimore Sun.

At Manassas on July 21, 1861, General Beauregard's forces were in position opposite the federals. It was a hot, dry day and a cloud of dust attended every movement. A new body of troops was seen moving toward the right of the bluecoats. The Confederate general's eyes, strained in their direction to discover whether they were friend or foe, were thwarted by the smoke and dust and the breathless air, which left their flags limp and indistinguishable. The necessity of opening fire became more pressing with each moment if they were enemy troops. As uncertainty reached its most critical point, a sudden puff spread the colors to the breeze, revealing to the thankful Confederates the Star and Bars.

Following the incident Beauregard discussed with Gen. Joseph Johnston and other officers his determination that the troops should be led by "a banner so distinct that no doubt ever shall endanger the cause again on the battlefield." Designs were discussed, and several were submitted. At Fairfax courthouse in September, 1861, the Southern Cross, or battle flag, was unanimously chosen and endorsed by the officers gathered there. Correctly made, this flag is absolutely square, a red field upon which is imposed a blue cross bearing 11 white stars.

Cut Your Expenses!

The easiest way to cut expenses and save money this winter is to prevent sickness expense. Thousands of women are adopting the health habit of giving a mild laxative to every member of the family once a week. This prevents or checks colds, headaches, dizziness, biliousness, and constipation.

NATURE'S REMEDY—NR—being safe, mild and all-vegetable, is ideal for this family use. Try it and save sickness expense. Only 25c.

Language of Broadcasts
The talking motion pictures and the radio are undeniably having an effect on language as it is spoken. The microphone has definite limits, which are even further limited by the films and their technique. Long words, and particularly sibilant words with nuance of inflection, do not reproduce properly. So for the making of "talkies" there has to be a vocabulary censorship. This censorship has weeded out a long list of words. It is noteworthy that most of those words which have been retained have been those belonging, roughly speaking, to the Anglo-Saxon family. And many of those which have been banished are of distinctly Latin ancestry.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Rare Books Filmed
The rare and valuable volumes of the Sterling library of Yale are being preserved by copying on tiny films. In this way persons interested may be allowed to consult and examine the works without the necessity of risking the originals. Thirty-two hundred pages may be copied on 200 feet of film and at the rate of 300 or 400 pages an hour. A book of 250 pages may be copied on a film which when rolled is no larger than a spool of cotton. The films when properly cared for are almost everlasting.

Altar to St. Patrick
On a hill within a mile of the spot where St. Patrick landed from Rome 1,500 years ago, Ireland is to erect a great open-air altar. The altar will cost $50,000. The money is being raised among villages. The first sod was turned on St. Patrick's day during the celebrations of the fifteenth centenary.

Out Our Way

Tales of Real Dogs By Albert Payson Terhune

He Halted On the Bank

He was a big and handsome police dog. He had strayed from his master's home, near the town of Niagara Falls, N. Y.

The day was a red hot one in the early summer of 1931. There was promise of coolness and of freedom in the green lawns of Prospect park, which skirts the Niagara river above the falls.

The dog made for the park. He did not bother the throngs of people who strolled or loafed there, but trotted happily about, rolling luxuriously on the grass and behaving himself every bit as well as did any of the park's human visitors.

But it is against the local regulations for a dog to run at large in that park, with neither collar nor muzzle.

The English understand such things better than we do. In the beautiful miles of parks in London, you will see hundreds of dogs on every fine day, and nobody is the worse for them.

The chief of the Prospect park system's police force, Tracy Levy, caught sight of the happy dog and ordered him caught and tied up somewhere until his owner could be found.

Roy Baney, a patrolman, undertook to capture the dog. He had no trouble in doing it, for the animal was friendly and tame.

A rope was tied around his neck by the policeman, who then started to drag him to the park station.

While the big dog had been entirely willing to make friends, he did not care for this humiliating treatment. He was not used to being dragged along by a rope, by strangers.

The dog gave a mighty yank, which switched the rope out of Baney's grasp. Then, to avoid further capture, he made a dash for the nearby river.

He was a mighty swimmer, and probably he thought he stood less chance of being recaptured if he took to the water than if he stayed in the park.

With the policeman close at his heels, the dog reached the brink of the stream. Spectators had watched the chase with idle amusement. Now they stood breathless with horror. Baney came to a sudden halt on the bank.

For this was no ordinary body of water. It was a vast and widening river which spell certain death to anyone who might fall into it at

STUDY PLANS FOR "GREATER UNIVERSITY"

Philip, S. D.—(AP)—The state regents of education have started investigation of a plan for a "Greater University of South Dakota," but results of their study probably will not be made public until the 1933 legislative session. At request of the 1931 legislature, the board of regents is examining possibilities of combining the state's seven institutions of higher education into a single system under direct control of a chancellor, with was. But his gallant heart did not flinch, nor did he lose for a moment the strange canine instinct for direction.

He battled his way, with weary slowness, out of the grip of the maelstrom and into somewhat quieter and shallower waters.

He was nearing the shore where a crowd waited eagerly to rescue him. But he could not quite make it. There are limits even to the strong endurance of a great police dog.

With one last effort of his ebbing strength, he crawled to the flat top of a rock, a few inches above the water; and fell there, exhausted, dripping, panting.

He had done what no human ever had done. He had ridden the American Falls, without a barrel and without any other aid. He had achieved what every swimming expert had long ago declared humanly impossible.

His work was done. He could go no further until he should have time to lie there on the rock and rest, and get back his breath and recover from the buffeting and strangulation that had been his. The rope still dangled limply from his neck; the rope he had yanked from Baney's grip.

A park concession man, John Cavanaugh, knew the waters, there at the edge of the great pool. Out into them he waded carefully toward the panting dog. The water was shallow enough for the man to walk out to the rock.

He gathered the unresisting tired dog in his arms and carried him safely to the shore.

There the reservations officials took charge of the valiant swimmer, but not at all in the spirit of capture which had been shown toward him a few minutes earlier.

The dog was rubbed down and patted and fed and made much of. He was the hero of the day. Unanimously they bestowed upon him the name, "Lucky." If a dog deserved that name it was the swimmer of the American Falls. But, 50 times more, he merited the name of "Plucky."

Lucky he was that he was not drowned when the maelstrom sucked him under and that he was not dashed to death against a rock instead of landing in a "cushion" of water deep enough to lighten the force of the fall.

But it was his pluck and wisdom that made him fight on, shrewdly, not blindly, to a safe landing. He achieved the impossible just because he kept on fighting a battle which everyone else believed to be hopeless.

All honor to him!

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED

With all this unemployment stuff, When any job's a boon, One fact should reassure give— A chap can always croon.

You may emit a string of notes Discordant as a loon; That needn't cramp your style at all— Indeed, you'll better croon.

Just stand before a microphone And moan about the moon. And when you've eased your pain a bit, Then pull stop labeled, "June."

I here suggest, put off the air Those sub and would-be crooners, And broadcast o'er the ether waves, Some good piano tuners.

HE DIDN'T MIND

From the Weekly Scotsman "What a splendid view," exclaimed the tourist to his Scottish guide when they had reached the top of a mountain. "It is a pity I have forgotten the glasses."

"Never mind, sir," replied the Scotsman, "there's nobody about. We'll just drink it out the bottle."

Transparent Aluminum
Transparent aluminum has been produced by a German chemist by substitution of substances in preparing an alloy which retains all the properties of the original metal, yet permits the passing of light. So far, the emerging light has a yellowish tinge, but the chemist is working to eliminate this color and make a glass-clear product.

Quite Possible
"Haven't I seen you somewhere some time?"
"Quite likely. I've been there."

End "Nagging"

SHE is easy to look at, but hard to get along with. Always faultfinding... scolding... bothered by "nerves." How unhappy she is! And so is her husband. And yet, the "balance" that comes from good health and steady nerves would make a tremendous difference in their lives.
