

After Two-Thousand-Year Sleep

Twenty centuries have passed since the ancients sculptured these figures of stone, which, surviving the ravages of time, have been discovered by Dr. Einar Gjerstad among the excavations in the village of Ajia Irini, on the Island of Cyprus. Dr. Gjerstad, who made this picture, is the leader of the Swedish archaeological expedition which recently made many valuable scientific discoveries on the island.

Helena Raskob and Fiance

Miss Helena Raskob (left), daughter of John J. Raskob, Democratic Party leader, whose engagement to Joseph T. Gueting (right), of Philadelphia, was recently announced. Gueting is the son of the executive of a shoe company. He has been working in one of the company stores as a clerk since his graduation from high school in order to study the business from the ground up. No date for the wedding has been fixed.

Another Schlager?

Said to be the best heavyweight developed in Germany since it produced the former champion, Max Schmeling, Walter Neusel (above) plans a visit to the United States shortly. Neusel boasts an unbeaten record. He has been held to two draws.

New Polish Envoy

The Hon. Stanislaus Patek, newly appointed Polish Ambassador to the United States, is pictured as he arrived at New York, enroute to Washington, to take over his post. Ambassador Patek was formerly his country's envoy to Soviet Russia and is considered one of Europe's foremost authorities on that country.

Celebration in Order

It isn't often that an ex-mayor makes a hole in one, but when such an event occurs a little celebration is perfectly in order. Such a celebration is shown here as former Mayor James J. Walker, of New York; Betty Compton, Broadway showgirl, and Carl Brisson, London stage impresario, go into a song and dance after Walker had shot a hole in one at the Biot Golf Course at Nice, France.

Fighting With a Smile

Eugene Flannery, of Winthrop, Mass., is shown as he started his sixth month in a respirator, following an attack of the dreaded infantile paralysis. But you'd think he enjoyed it all, by the cheerful grin he displays as his nurse reads to him. Eugene is only eight years old.

Cowboy Governor

Attired in the traditional costume of the cattle range, ten-gallon hat, chaps and all, Governor Eugene Talmadge, of Georgia, posed for this picture soon after his recent inauguration as pilot of the Peach State. Governor Talmadge, when he isn't busy at the governing business, runs a live stock farm at Mc Rae, Ga.

Plane Godmother

Ellen Knight, daughter of the City Commissioner of Miami, Fla., is shown as she did the honors with the champagne bottle at the christening of the new U. S. Army bomber, City of Miami, at the National Air Meet, held at the Florida city, recently. The U. S. dirigible Akron participated in the ceremonies.

Jaunty Mermaid

What the well-dressed bather will wear is charmingly demonstrated by Miss Jane Emery, of Chicago, who is a member of the younger set gathered at Palm Beach, Fla., for the fashionable Winter season. Miss Emery is wearing Hawaiian trunks with a brown jersey top. The outfit is intended for swimming rather than for a beach ornament, but it serves both purposes.

Off for a Dip

Mrs. McClelland Barclay, wife of the noted artist and illustrator, is shown leading her Scotty, Charcoal, to the water for a dip in the pool. Her husband is concluding five years' work on a series of murals for the Los Angeles Public Library. Photo was made at Palm Springs, Cal.

Star and Author Hubby

Spending their honeymoon listening to what the wild waves are saying at Atlantic City, N. J., Charles Beahan, film scenario writer, and his bride, Sidney Fox, screen star, are shown as they strolled on the boardwalk of the resort. Mrs. Beahan has not decided whether or not she will resume her movie career.

An Aerial Holdup? No!

Johnny Crowell, Charlotte, N. C., aviator, has his hands up simply to show that flying without the use of his hands is an easy matter. Crowell takes off, lands and manipulates the throttle and controls with his legs and feet. He is planning a "handless" flight from coast to coast.

Newcomer to Movie Colony

Little Joan Mary Kirkwood, daughter of James Kirkwood, veteran stage and screen actor, reposes blissfully in the loving arms of her mother, the former Beatrice Powers, of the Follies, as the baby made her camera debut. Hollywood was generous in its congratulations to the proud parents.
