

Becomes Interested In Telegraphy At Early Age

Here is a young fellow who is stepping fast toward a place in the Holt county hall of fame. His name is Robert, 17, son of M. H. McCarthy, of O'Neill.

Besides attending school, where his record always was very good, Robert delivered messages for the uptown office of the Western Union telegraph company here.

Starting at the age of 12, Robert undertook to fathom the kinks in the art of pounding brass, that is, how to work a telegraph key and to correctly read what comes over the wires. Now he can send messages at about 20 words a minute. Several traveling men who had worked wires say Robert is gifted at telegraphy. Robert gives credit to Pauline Dooley, now ill in St. Joseph's hospital at Omaha, for his having grasped the ins and outs of telegraphy.

The Start of A Stock Share Lease In 1934

Landlords and new tenants who are starting to operate on a stock share lease for the first time in 1934 will divide the hog benefit payments of the corn-hog contract in proportion to the contribution each party has made to the hog base they bring into the new arrangement for 1934. The case may be illustrated by the following example:

Brown is the landlord who has been farming the farm in 1932 and 1933. He has had an average of 15 litters and 75 hogs marketed in the two years. He decides to turn the place over to his son-in-law in 1934 on a stock share lease, each furnishing an equal number of brood sows and each taking 50 per cent of the returns. The son-in-law, Smith, has been farming on another farm and has a hog base of 9 litters and 45 hogs marketed. The question is, how much hog benefit payment will go to Brown and how much to Smith in 1934.

The combined hog base of the two men is 24 litters and 120 pigs. They agree to reduce to 18 litters and 90 pigs in 1934 to comply with the corn-hog contract. Their total benefit payment will be approximately $450 and it will come to them in separate checks. Brown will get about $261, because he contributed 75 of the 120 pigs toward the hog base. Smith will get about $189, because he contributed 45 of the 120 pigs to the base. The percentage which each man is to receive must be figured out by the men filling out the contract for Smith and Brown, and entered in the proper place on page four of the contract.
