MEAT—
AND THE CONSUMER'S DOLLAR

Men who carry on in industry must eat meat for proper nourishment. You, the farmer and stockman, get a generous proportion of the money that they spend for food.

The more money you spend to purchase the products of their toil, the more meat can they eat—and the higher the price they can afford to pay.

You get more money for your stock when everyone sells on the PRIMARY market. When spent, it helps the city worker. It comes back to you in the form of still higher prices for your stock—and everyone can live better.
