July 1, 1934 Crop Report

The outstanding feature of the July Crop Report is the unprecedented drouth and its effects upon spring grains, hay pasture and the uncertain future of the corn crop, particularly in about 30 drouth stricken counties of the state. The July 1 prospects for corn were quite satisfactory in northeastern and southwestern Nebraska. The prospects in central and southeastern Nebraska are extremely poor. Most of the oats are a failure, same holds for barley. Prospects for spring wheat are extremely poor. Hay crops are light. Forage hay crops have a fairly good chance in the favored sections of the State, but prospects are poor in the drouth stricken counties. Pastures are still bare in drouth stricken counties and there is very little hope for pasturage until the coming fall unless we could have rain every week. Pastures are better in the favored sections and in part of the sandhills. The farm potato crop will be light, but prospects are still good in the western Nebraska commercial area which has a large increase in acreage.

The severe drouth affecting Nebraska is quite general over most of the Corn-belt area and has extended into both northwestern and southwestern portions of the country. It is forcing the sale of large numbers of cattle and it appears that the surplus of cattle that has accumulated for the past few years will be eliminated by the shortage of feed and pasture. The reduction in the hog crop has been very heavy thruout the country.

Senator Smith objects to the selection of Professor Tugwell as Under-Secretary of Agriculture because he thinks a real "out-doors" man should have the job. Doesn't he know that they always raise better crops in the class-room than on the farm?

In our boyhood we have seen more hay pitched around the cracker barrel in a country store on a rainy day than was ever handled in a hayfield in the same length of time.

Vassar College has lifted the ban on married students. Is old Vassar going militaristic?

If the debtor nations ever follow Secretary Hull's suggestion that they make "payment in kind" on the war debt, just think what a surplus of baloney we will soon have on hand.

MEAT and MONEY—

You don't have to urge a real man to eat meat. He likes it. He knows it provides energy, vigor, health, and steels his nerves. But he can't buy meat without a job. You can put him to work, raise his pay, and advance the market for meat animals by selling on the PRIMARY market.

Real buying competition can only exist when ALL stock sells on the primary market. Real competition will bring higher prices—give you more money to spend. That money will create more jobs and keep live stock quotations advancing.
