Nebraska's Political Sower

velt's policies. The democrats are solidly behind the president, while the republicans have adopted a platform attacking both the national and state democratic administrations.

The democratic party resolved to adhere "to the ideals and purposes of the Roosevelt administration." It admitted that the new deal is in the making, and stated that the main objectives are in the making. These objectives are the "opening of opportunities to work and the revival of buying power among the masses of the American people and the restoration of a parity of prices between agricultural and industrial products. Joined with these is the determination to take the control of government out of the hands of powerful special interests and classes, and place it in the keeping of the whole people, to be fairly and impartially administered for the common good of all."

The democrats cited the unprecedented aid given to the midwest by the Roosevelt administration. They pledged themselves to uphold the development of water and similar natural resources, and to the repeal of the present prohibition laws. E. L. Burke, nominee for senator, and R. L. Cochran, gubernatorial nominee were conspicuous at the convention. James C. Quigley, of Valentine, campaign manager for Burke, was named chairman of the state central committee.

An interesting sidelight of the democratic conclave was the desertion of the convention by Eugene O'Sullivan, unsuccessful candidate for the nomination for governor, William Ritchie, who stumped the state in support of Governor Bryan for senator and William Banning for governor, and 18 others who journeyed from Omaha to Lincoln to place flowers upon the desk of Governor Bryan. The latter informed them that he was not thru with politics yet, despite Arthur Mulens avowed intention of driving him out of Nebraska politics.

Dwight Griswold, nominee for governor, and Bob Simmons, senatorial nominee, were much in evidence at the republican convention. Both expressed opposition to the democratic administration as is. Lyle Jackson, of Neligh, who became chairman of the state central committee last spring when Robert Smith, of Omaha, resigned, was renamed chairman of the committee.

The republicans pledged strict adherence to constitutional limitations on the power of government in order to preserve individual rights and avoid a bureaucratic system of "dictatorship." Opposition was expressed to any new forms of taxation and to a continuation of the present army of "tax eaters" under the democratic administration. An attack was made on bureaucracy, the NRA, AAA and other new deal innovations, and a return was demanded to the anti-trust laws.

The republicans failed to take a stand on state prohibition, and they tabled a motion to go on record as opposed to Senator Norris' one-house legislature plan, altho Jackson Chase of Omaha, who ran second to Dick Johnson, of Lincoln, in the race for republican nomination for attorney general, had insisted that the party oppose the plan. The republicans did, however, recommend the abolition of the office of state land commissioner, and substitution of a utilities commission appointed by the governor for the present railway commission.

GIST OF THE CAPITOL NEWS: A seven-day hunting season has been set for pheasants—October 12 to 18. The reduction from 10 days was made because of the drouth. The commission also has reduced the daily bag limit to four males or three males and one female, with possession limit the same—four birds. The 15 counties in the state which will not be open to shooting are Sheridan, Box Butte, Cass, Cherry, Dawes, Douglas, Gage, Johnson, Lancaster, Nemaha, Otoe, Pawnee, Richardson, Sarpy and Washington. In addition, the part of Sioux county north of the government ditch will be closed. The North Platte valley is described as the best hunting grounds this year.

The state fair is on its last legs, if rumors around the capitol are to be credited. It is a known fact that a legislative appropriation must be forthcoming before next year's fair is held, and a number of fair boosters are advocating a free fair.

President Miller of the state fair board expresses a bit more optimistic view of the situation, however. He says that the fair this year ended in better financial condition than for the past three years. The fair may get 50 per cent of the grandstand receipts this year thru an agreement with the grandstand building bond holders, but on the other hand incidental expenses which have arisen elsewhere may eat up this extra revenue. Miller states emphatically that there will be no free fair in 1935. As a matter of fact, it will be largely up to the next legislature to say whether Nebraska has a state fair next year.

Farmers who have corn under seal for federal loans, wishing to extend their loans to January 1, are required to get a written extension form into the hands of the Commodity Credit corporation by October 1, according to the announcement by the Nebraska railway commission.

Governor Bryan, altho beaten decisively by Congressman Burke, of Omaha for the democratic nomination for U. S. Senator, declared that the democratic endorsement should be of his own administration and that of President Roosevelt. "I assume Nebraska democrats will approve the state administration in bringing the state the highest financial credit and lowest tax rate of any state in the union," he says. "Nebraska has reduced taxes 40 per cent in the past four years. Bryan has indicated that he will not support Burke in the race for congress, but he also has declined to support the republican nominee, Bob Simmons, who is staunchly anti-new deal.

Congressman Edward R. Burke was chosen to present the democratic viewpoint of current political problems in a nationwide broadcast over the Columbia network September 11. Burke's subject was "Nebraska looks at the new deal," he assured his radio audience that the Cornhusker state will go decidedly pro-Roosevelt in the coming election.

Nebraska's gubernatorial candidates have started to outline decisively their positions so that the voters may know. Cochran, democratic nominee, declares that he is under no obligations in the matter of making appointments if he is elected. His appointments will be strictly on a merit basis, he says. The accusation that he is a Bryan protege is belied by recent developments wherein a number of Bryan supporters bolted the democratic state convention at Omaha to pay Governor Bryan a friendly visit, while Cochran was occupying a main chair at Omaha, upholding the Roosevelt administration and the duly nominated democratic candidates. Griswold meanwhile declared himself against the new deal, and promised that if elected he would clean house at the state capitol. He is directing verbal thunderbolt against the NRA, AAA and bureaucracy as represented by the democratic administration, both in Washington and Lincoln.
