E. Gibbs was the officiating clergyman. Mrs. Lowell McDonald played the wedding march while the wedding party entered the parlor of the home and stood before a background of flowers and autumn foliage. Mrs. McDonald, accompanied by her husband sang, "Oh Promise Me," and "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." The bride was escorted and given in marriage by her grandfather, J. W. Havenstrite. She wore a white satin gown and bridal veil and carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds and fern. Miss Marjorie Hadapp, sister of the groom was bridesmaid and wore a pale green silk dress and carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds. The groom, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hadapp, of Sebastopol, Calif., was attend by the bride's brother, Paul Jackson.

Spanish Language Came With Columbus' Troop

The New world began to speak Spanish when Columbus colonized Hispaniola (the island of Haiti). Long before the time of Jamestown and Plymouth, Spaniards were not only exploring and adventuring in this hemisphere, but diffusing their language and culture by planting permanent settlements, setting up printing presses, and founding universities. Spanish was a dominant language for our own Southwest less than a hundred years ago, asserts a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

Today in many Texas, New Mexico and Arizona communities near the Mexican border, Spanish is almost as necessary as English. Almost as many people of Mexican blood live in the states of the American side of our southern border as live in the Mexican states on the other side of it. Los Angeles is one of the largest Mexican populated cities in the world, with a Spanish speaking element larger than the entire population of Connecticut.

Indian words with first a Spanish, then an English twist in spelling also are part of our speech heritage from Spain. Potato and tomato, tobacco, mesquite, chocolate, guano, henequin, maize, cannibal, canoe—these and other native terms the Spaniards took from Mexico, Peru, the Caribbean islands and elsewhere. They passed them on to us.

Hungarian Shepherd Dog Has Wavy, Silken Coat

The same inherent reasoning power that endows the herding dog with a superior type of canine intelligence also expresses itself in the Kuvasz, or White Hungarian Shepherd.

Through centuries and centuries of herding, writes an authority in the Los Angeles Times, his ancestors have imparted to offspring that highly developed mental process that has produced qualities now considered distinct.

By virtue of his heritage, the Kuvasz should prove worthy of the performance of duty required of any dog. Behind him is the ancestry of over a thousand years, according to research.

Like the closely related but more massive Great Pyrenees, with which he is often confused, he is cloaked with a deep ivory-white wavy silken coat. His splendid head is flanked with ivory or cream-tinted drop ears. But the Kuvasz is seldom over 28 inches in height, and his weight averages 70 pounds.

His black eyes are more oblique and set closer together than those of the Pyrenees. . . his ears are rounder and more elevated and he is longer in the couplings. His black eyes, nose and lips form a pleasing contrast against his white background, making him one of the most beautiful of all dogs.

Austro-Hungarian Monarchy

Prior to the World war the Austro-Hungarian monarchy consisted of two states, the Austrian empire and the Hungarian kingdom. The relation between them was fully regulated by the so-called compromise of 1867. According to this agreement the two states were perfectly independent of each other, each possessing its own constitution, legislature and executive departments for most branches of state affairs. There was, however, a close political connection between them, through the identity of the sovereign and the community of certain departments of state affairs.

Camel and Dromedary

The camel is a large ruminant that is found chiefly in northern Asia. Its two humps and large back surface make it an especially valuable beast of burden. The dromedary, a one-humped member of the same family, lacks the strength and endurance of the camel, but for this deficiency it compensates by its great speed. In fact, says G. R. Turner in the Kansas City Times, in comparison to the ordinary camel it is as speedy as is a race horse to a cart horse. The habitat of the dromedary is mainly Arabia and northern Africa.

"Love Spoons" in Wales

Welsh love spoons are considered so interesting that Aberystwyth has a museum collection of them. Until recently young men used to carve wooden spoons for the girls of their choice. The decoration became so elaborate that many of them are not spoons at all, but panels, carved all over with wonderful figures, a tiny hole being made just to recall the fact that it began as a spoon. Many of these spoons are preserved, and are handed down in Welsh families. They are all carved with a pocket knife.

Cock-Crower's Job Ended

From 1641 to 1840, the kings of England maintained an official "Cock-crower," a man who appeared in the king's apartment at midnight on Ash Wednesday and crowed, to remind the monarch of Christ's betrayal. On this night in 1840, the new Prince Consort, who had never heard of the crower, was quietly reading when his door flew open and a voice cried, "Cock-a-doodle." The shock was terrible. Thus ended the 799-year-old job.—Collier's Weekly.

Nephew of Ed and Jim Earley Is Winner of Curtiss Trophy Race

The following clipping is from the North Bend, Nebr., Eagle. The Thomas Gaughen mentioned herein as having won the Curtiss trophy race by piloting a Curtiss P-6E plane at the rate of over 191 miles per hour over a sixty mile course, is a son of Mrs. Ella Gaughen, of North Bend. Mrs. Gaughen was a former O'Neill girl, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Earley, who lived north of this city, and who is a sister of Edward Earley and James Earley, pioneer residents of this county. Thomas Gaughen spent many summers here visiting with his uncles and he has many friends in this vicinity who will be interested in reading of his exploit in the air. The clipping follows:

"Saturday evening Mrs. Ella Gaughen received a telephone message from Margaret Kelly from Selfridge Field, Mount Clements, Mich. Margaret called to tell Mrs. Gaughen that her son Thomas had that afternoon won the Curtiss trophy race by piloting a Curtiss P-6-E plane 191.446 miles an hour over a 60 mile course. Thomas also greeted his mother over the phone.

"It was a big day in the annals of flying history, and a large number of notable people were among the huge crowd that attended. Twenty-four planes were entered in the various races, six of them in the Curtiss division in which Thomas participated. A crowd estimated to number 100,000 witnessed the performance which filled them with thrills and chills.

"The gate receipts for the day were for the Army Relief Fund and the exhibition unofficially marked the dedication of the new air post which replaced the war-time field. The Mitchell trophy was won by Capt. Fred C. Nelson who traveled over a 20 mile course at a speed of 216.832 miles an hour.

"Margaret Kelly, of Detroit, and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Brown, of Mount Pleasant, were Thomas' guests for the day and Mrs. Brown (Alice Kastle) has written her mother, Mrs. T. J. Kastle, a very interesting account of the day's happenings. Her letter reads, in part, as follows:

"Most darling mother: Well I will tell you about yesterday. We had such a good time Thomas was in the Curtiss trophy race in a Curtiss bombing plane. He was fourth to start off. You couldn't tell easily who was winning since it went by time and they strated off one by one so we had to wait for an official report. Thomas won by traveling 191.446 miles per hour. I thing he was as thrilled as we were, altho he was so very modest, as he always is. Margaret Kelly was there and she couldn't resist having him call his mother to let her know it was over. A boy doesn't often want to do those things.

"We were at Selfridge field by 10:30 Saturday and such a crowd and such a lot of cars you never saw. We got in as guests of Thomas.

"Before finding Thomas we watched the exhibition of the Martin bomber, the most effective air craft, and a huge tri-motored plane piloted by the new head of Selfridge Field, Major Royce, who flew the very bombs to Alaska on the trip written up in the papers in the summer, I believe. Then there was smoke writing in the sky by a plane 8,000 feet up, most interesting and formation flying by visiting navy planes and the huge and beautiful silver-colored Douglas plane—the type that Rickenbacher broke his cross-country record in. Wright aeroplanes were there too. We saw Mr. and Mrs. Pickard of stratosphere fame. In fact Thomas was in the announcers stand with them. "There were lots of things to see then and at 12 o'clock Thomas came along. Here he had been announcing the program and maneuvering and speakers, which was a great help in knowing all that was going on. He did it beautifully and his voice was excellent. In fact we were so proud of Thomas and he deserves it every bit. His modesty is so natural and delightful too. He took us to his apartment in the bachelor's quarters, a lovely place. He has a living room, bed room and bath, all very comfortable. Then we went to the dining room for a delicious dinner. Then we went out to the busy and full afternoon.

"We left at 7:00 and got home at 10:30. It had been a perfect day and we so thoroughly enjoyed it all and were so pleased at Thomas' success. It should mean a great deal to him for, as the announcer said, the planes were so well matched for speed that it was the pilot who used his head who would win. We have always said that about Thomas, 'he uses his head.'

"He is hoping that all goes well so he can stop at home on his cross country trip to California (which will be Saturday) so you will be seeing him soon. Wish we all had planes to travel around in."

Thomas said in a letter to his mother that he knew as soon as he saw Alice after the race that he had won.

Holding Organized Agriculture Meetings

Western Nebraska organized agriculture meetings in six towns last week were well attended and regarded by the local people as highly successful. This is the second year that a series of six meetings have been held in six different locations in the pan handle section of the state.

Organized agriculture meetings at Lincoln will be held the first full week in January, beginning Jan. 7. Secretaries of the state associations which meet at Lincoln have been arranging their programs during the last few days along the lines followed in previous years.

No definite announcements can be made regarding the mass meeting speakers who will be on the program this year. Attempts are being made to get some of the outstanding men and women of the country to discuss the current problems of Nebraska farmers and home-makers.

The home economics association is now printing copies of their program. Miss Ruth O'Brien, of Washington, D. C., is the leading speaker of their program. Poultrymen will hold a four day question and answer period considering about 75 of the leading questions commonly asked by the poultry raisers of the state. Crop growers, livestock men, and the agricultural engineering group are figuring out some joint topics and meetings dealing with the emergency problems brot on by the drouth.

Four banquets will be held during the week. T. A. Alexander will have charge of the farmers family fun feed on Wednesday evening. A mass meeting will be held each day with the final session on Thursday afternoon.
