Donald, 18-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Chet Calkins, came toddling to older children Tuesday afternoon with an ossified rib bone, 4 1/2 inches long and 1 inch wide that he undoubtedly picked up where Jim Kelley and crew had discarded material drawn up in digging the Calkin's well deeper in southeast O'Neill. The well is down 42 feet and now has 26 feet of water, although it had been almost dry. The bone appears to have been shaped by ancients, perhaps for a knitting or weaving piece, in fact it has deeply worn spots, smooth, and the ends had been rounded. The bone is brown but near white on the worn places.
