Egg Yolk Color May Be Controlled by Feed

Do you prefer an egg with a light yellow yolk or one that has a deep orange red color? Deeply colored yolks are used by housewives when they wish to impart a golden color to their cakes. Such yolks are also used in making richly tinted ice cream.
 A hen can transfer different shades to the yolk—depending upon the kind of feed she receives. Substituting white for yellow corn and limiting the amount of green feed tends to produce light-yellow yolks, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. If the poultryman keeps his laying stock confined and uses little or no green feed, he must be careful to supply some other sources of vitamin A when he uses white corn which contains almost none of this vitamin. He can do this by mixing a suitable quantity of codliver oil with the evening's feeding of scratch grain.
 Yolks with richer shades of yellow may be obtained by increasing the quantity of yellow corn and green feed. Too much green feed tends to give the yolk a brown or green "off tint."

 Small quantities of pimento or chili pepper, included in regular rations, give yolks a deep orange-red color.
