THE NEBRASKA SCENE

Special Session Side-Lights

A member of the house of representatives who helped while away the time during the regular session by taking frequent nips from (a then) illegal bottle of spirits frumenti, spent just 10 days with the special session. Then with his $100 and travel expenses in his pocket he hid himself home. Incidentally, there probably is only one representative district in the state where his actions would be countenanced, but the people in that district rather enjoy him and would elect him to the unicameral legislature if the district were big enough.

While members of the legislature were pinching pennies and eating in hamburger joints during the last days of the session, employees of the two houses were wreathed in smiles. Your correspondent heard a mixed quartet singing "I Won't Go Home Until Morning" somewhere in the state house a few days ago. Upon trailing the sound, it was discovered to come from a mimeograph room.

A high leader of the democratic party in the state who naturally refused the use of his name in print, stated confidentially that the last two-house group of legislators is the worst in his memory.

"Of course there are many fine legislators in the bunch," he said, "but the majority are the bunk. They don't know apple butter from et cetera. I used to oppose the unicameral idea, but I've come to believe it will be a blessing. At least it can't be any worse than what we've got. I honestly believe that each legislature has been worse than its predecessor since the state was born."

Director W. B. Banning of the state department of agriculture and inspection gave his office help a real scare recently when he developed a nose-bleed that wouldn't stop. He became so weak that they had to lay him on his back and send a rush call for a doctor. It later was ascertained that an old-fashioned nose blowing had broken a small blood vessel.

ONE MILLION FORD V-8 CARS AND TRUCKS IN TEN MONTHS

ON OCTOBER 31 of last year, Henry Ford announced his intention to build a million Ford V-8s in 1935. We are pleased to report that this goal was reached in exactly ten months instead of a full year.

One million cars and trucks is an impressive total. But figures by themselves mean nothing. It is what they represent that counts. Selling a V-8 at a low price has brought a new kind of automobile within reach of the people. Producing it has provided steady work for hundreds of thousands of men in the Ford plants, in associated industries and on the farm.

These million Ford V-8 cars and trucks have helped to make things better all around. In the first ten months of 1935 the Ford Motor Company paid out, in the United States alone, $140,119,326.00 in wages and $523,111,389.00 for materials.
