 tence of six months. In 1905 the constitution did not permit a county court to decree both a six months' sentence and a $500 fine, and the law was afterward declared by the Supreme court to be unconstitutional. In 1920, the constitution was changed, extending the power of the county court. The lawyers composing the judiciary committee inquired as to Senator Carpenter's indisputable knowledge of the law, and were informed that he once took a correspondence law course.
