

Hidden Taxes Dull Taxpayer's Feeling
 People who are close to this administration admit that this government will never go back to the old-time budgets which used to be around four or five billion dollars. If good times come, these people say, we may get below a seven billion dollar a year budget, but not for long. They know that the budget will always go up. It always has gone up.

In answer to the many questions asked by newly arrived visitors here: "Where will it all come out?" The answer is that it will come out of the pockets of the people. It is argued that the people continue to want more and more. That costs money, people's money. So that why there is so much talk right now about our tax structure. Some are advocating the repeal of "hidden taxes" which now produce most of the government revenue and enact instead direct and visible taxes that touch the pocket nerves of the largest number of voters. These people figure that when they touch the individual pocketbook, they touch the heart. They feel if the people or voters actually felt the hidden taxes which they do not feel so much now, they might suddenly realize that they are hiring somebody to actually spend their actual cash in hand.

Want An Embargo on Junk Metal

Although it has been going on for quite a few years, members of the House and Senate have suddenly awakened to the fact that America is being denuded of scrap tin and scrap iron, which is being shipped to Japan and European countries, where it is being turned into engines and munitions of war. Junk dealers all over the United States have been gathering the cast iron metals in quantities and shipping it out, until at last the metal interests of the United States are crying for an embargo before our country is stripped of metal which is needed here. Only a short time ago we went into a war to end all wars and to make the world safe for democracy, and now a bill has been introduced in the Senate asking for the control of junk metal and it may come up for discussion later with some very interesting relations.

City Wants More Money

So fast is this City of Washington growing that the commissioners of the town are formulating a five year—seventy-five million dollars improvement program for the district. Although plans are under way by the city government to increase taxation here, the people of the town are focusing their eyes on Congressmen, wanting the taxpayers of the forty-eight states to contribute a little money toward the expense of this city.

Crowds of Employees Amaze Nebraskans

Wonderment is written on the faces of Nebraska visitors who go down town at 9 o'clock in the morning and see thousands of well dressed young men and young women hurrying to get into the office buildings. They come out again by the thousands at four or four thirty in the afternoon. During those hours the streets are jammed with busses, street cars, taxis and private cars. It is a street traffic problem twice a day, morning and afternoon.

Nebraskans say they see such crowds once a year—that's when the circus comes to their town. Washington has a circus crowd twice a day, only the Washington crowds are about twenty times the size of our Nebraska circus crowds.

"What God Hath Wrought"

On 14th and F streets here in Washington, stands a telephone pole which marks the spot where the first telegraph office in the United States was located. It might be of interest also to know that the first telegram ever sent was "clicked off" on a telegraph key by Samuel F. B. Morse on May 24, 1844 and this telegram was sent from the old supreme court room in the capitol building to Alfred Vail, who was a partner of Morse and who lived at Baltimore. The telegram read as follows: "What God Hath Wrought." Vail had gone to Baltimore which is a short distance from Washington for the express purpose of receiving this message and testing their new invention.

The old supreme court room which was the first sending station of telegrams, is threatened to become an inner room, because plans show a bill has already passed the Senate to change the entire front of the nation's capitol. The bill will be given a hearing in the House committee on buildings and grounds, which committee, a year ago, defeated such an attempt.

Need Efficiency and Economy

People at home ought to know that several committees have been appointed to study government bureaus and government spending and that these committees have made their reports. The President's message on executive reorganization was the result of a committee which was appointed by the executive. One committee dwells much on "economy" and the other on "efficiency."

The committee on economy has given some unusual facts which should be of interest. While these facts were called to the attention of home folks in these columns several times last year, they are given again to refresh the memory. Government agencies offices are scattered from Washington to Alexandria in Virginia all the way to Baltimore in Maryland. These offices should be located at the seat of government in Washington. The Resettlement Administration has thirteen addresses in Washington. There are over 104 information and publications offices for the government here. The government rents a building where government employees can get information about what government agencies do and where they are located, but changes are so fast that offices do not have all the information. There are 126 agency libraries here. There are fifty-one traffic managers in Washington—these arrange personnel, transportation, freight and also make purchases. The federal government now pays for more than 32,882 telephones in this town as compared with 17,000 telephones in 1930. The government now has 114,792 listed civil executive employees, not including those employees on the judicial, executive, military and relief payrolls. There are twice as many employees in this town alone as we had in the rocky days of 1927. Taxpayers pay nearly two million dollars a year for rental.

There have been more new jobs created since 1933 than during the first century of our nation's existence, and right now we are still adding at the rate of 100 new employees for every day and every month, and the town has been overrun with men and women looking for government jobs. Back in 1916 our total cost of government including interest on our public debt was around one billion dollars. Now the interest on our public debt alone is nearly as great as the total cost of government in that year. Not counting recovery and relief, we are spending nearly six times as much as we spent in 1916, so it is no wonder that both sides feel that the major problem is going to center around "what are we going to do with these hundreds of government agencies doing about the same thing." The question is will it be economy and efficiency, or will it be efficiency alone?

SOUTHWEST BREEZES

By Romaine Saunders
 Mr. and Mrs. H. L. James spent Sunday in Atkinson.

Farm-to-market roads make fascinating pre-election talk.

Maurice Kennedy was over this way from Amelia Saturday.

E. E. Young took a trailer load of hogs to the sale ring Tuesday.

Agricultural experts say the wind helps the grass grow. We'll take ours in showers.

Ray Bly and family spent the day Monday at the home of Mrs. Bly's parents over in Wyoming.

Monday morning an airplane droned across at a height that put it above the low drifting clouds headed due north.

The editor can have this column for the following few weeks for something worth while, as I will be away for a time.

Mrs. Welton was over in the southwest Friday, accompanying her husband, with the baby, on his mail route out of Amelia.

Mrs. H. E. Eno of Lincoln, accompanied her mother, Mrs. Saunders and brothers on their return home Tuesday. Her two boys are with her.

If the Russians want a—what is it they have?—the Germans a Hitler, the Italians a Mussolini, the Spaniards a revolution, that's their business.

What Bernard Kennedy regarded as his choicest of the milk stock died a day last week. The cow had been unable to get onto her feet for some two weeks previous.

Mrs. Roblyer of Atkinson, accompanied by her nephew, Lee Smith of Burwell, stopped in the neighborhood Monday while on her way home from a trip to Lincoln.

Something is always taking the joy out of life for certain groups. Italian winebibbers are in distress because there are "only 3,750,000,000 gallons" in prospect for this season.

Someone has it figured out that Americans have got self-government down to where there are a hundred and seventy-five thousand government units that now absorb twelve billion five hundred million dollars annually. It costs about $2 a vote down here in Swan to hold a primary election.

Just how a horse can lie down by a barbed wire fence to roll, flop over and get up on the other side of the fence without being slashed by the barbs is something of a trick. A 3-year-old did that in the pasture Sunday and came to meet me when I went out to lead her back thru the gate.

Those who had visions of the short strip of highway out of Amelia, about the only thing the southwest ever benefited from a legislative act, being extended thru the ranch country to the west have been sadly let down. Of the $1,500,000 to be spent on highways the southwest doesn't get a smell. But we were not included in the gas tax exemption.

Those who are busy tearing the country to pieces never run out of ideas. One of the latest is to substitute for the actual date upon which national and state holidays fall the Monday following, thus giving at that particular time three successive days cessation from business. Don't know whether the cows would hold over that long without being milked.

The southwest furnished the cowboy-artist who has been awarded the job of drawing the rodeo scene for the Union Pacific railroad to adorn the front of a folder the railroad is issuing. The "lucky dog" is Hugh Thomas James, from our neighboring ranch. Hugh left the neighboring two years ago and took up the study of commercial art at a large institute in Minneapolis and he developed a talent that has been recognized by one of the most exacting advertisers in the country. The idea of offering a prize of $25 for an illustration of a rodeo scene and an additional $75 for the completed drawing. Among a number of contestant's Hugh's offering has been accepted. He is now in Omaha after some months spent at home since being injured in a railroad wreck in January.

Hugh grew up amid Holt county ranch scenes and with his talent for drawing is eminently fitted to portray the bronc-riding stuff.
