Farr Goes Route

With Brown Bomber Joe Louis, holder of the heavyweight championship, and Tommy Farr, who is the heavyweight champion of the British isles, met in the Yankee Stadium in New York last Monday night for the title that Louis won a couple of months ago from James Braddock. The fight went the limit, fifteen rounds, and was a surprise all the way. American sport writers, not having received a lesson from the Schmelling-Loius fight, made little of the British challenger and the average lover of sports, acting upon the matter took what he read as the dope from people who should know and were convinced that the Welshman had no chance at all looked for his elimination in four or five rounds. So what was their surprise when the challenger carried the fight to the dusky champion in practically every round, having decidly the better of the contest in many of the rounds. Farr put up a great fight and practically all of the O'Neill fistic lovers, who listened to the account over the radio, were convinced that Farr could get nothing worse than a draw, but the judges decided otherwise and gave the fight to Louis on points. In the fifteenth and last round Farr socked Louis with rights and lefts and had him hanging on trying to evade punishment. Had the fight gone to a finish it might have had a different result. One thing certain Louis lost a lot of his prestage as a result of this fight and he

Striking Force Exerted Collision

TO ONE would be foolish enough to drive an automobile off of a precipice into a straight drop of 120 feet, but the driver who fails to slow down when an approaching car is on the wrong side of the road is running as great a risk. If the driver of the on-coming car is asleep, as sometimes happens, the car will remain on the wrong side of the road. In the event of a collision, with both cars traveling but 30 miles per hour, they would strike with the force of a 120 foot drop. If corpses could speak, they would warn us not to take for granted an obstruction will be removed by the time we reach it. When a car is approaching on the left side of the road it is wise to slow down to a speed so that you can drive into the ditch if necessary to avoid collision.

If forced off the road at 40 miles per hour you would strike a solid object such as a telephone pole with an impact equal to a drop of 53.5 feet. At a speed of only 20 miles per hour the impact would equal a drop of 13.4 feet. Few people would willingly attempt that small a drop in an automobile.

Traffic Violations are increasing daily—motor vehicle accidents also are greater as the speed mania grips the nation and carelessness in driving remains unchecked. A comprehensive study of this ever-present problem is being sponsored by this group of O'Neill merchants who are presenting this "Drive With Safety" Campaign.
