THE NEBRASKA SCENE

By the Lowell Service
Political sachems in Omaha and Lincoln plotted, planned, slaved and exhorted in mad efforts to create harmony. Form all appearances the results are nil.

The most ambitious attempt by the democrats. A turkey banquet was staged in Lincoln, with the affable Jim Farley as the guest of honor and master pacifier. Warring and peaceful democrats attended in droves and bunches.

The camera man officiated with the idea of giving a bona fide exhibit of brotherly love. Charley Bryan, James E. Lawrence, Governor Cochran, Postmaster General Farley and Postmaster Fenton were portrayed standing before the table where the feast was spread. Mr. Farley stressed the alleged fact that factions did not exist in the democratic party.

Scarcely had Sunny Jim departed when political hatchets flashed in the October sun. Charley Bryan, it is stated by some of his veterans, will run for the democratic nomination for governor, despite hell and high water. Roy Cochran's boys maintain that the governor just cannot quit right now without stepping clear out of the picture.

The rift in the democratic lute was further emphasized by the comments in the Lincoln Star, edited by James E. Lawrence. The editorial bore the caption "Lip Service."
"Jim Farley's Lincoln visit," said

the Star, "brought forth a sound view of the various groups within the democratic party itself. He said that in the complexity of the problems there was a place for men and women of different viewpoints, and there is. He said that in effect there was no place for those who merely gave lip service—who promise one thing before the election and did another thing after election.

"The implications were unmistakable."

The writer then proceeds to take fall out of Senator Burke by inference. All of which shows that the democrats might appropriately use a paraphrase of the old slogan "Yes, we have no harmony today."

With the republicans it is much the same. Two former presidential candidates, Hoover and Landon, have put down microphonic barrages. Aspiring candidates in Nebraska have been caught in the cross fire. Discreetly all the can- (Continued on page 5, column 5.)

DECREASE IN TOTAL NUMBER OF ACCIDENTS

school grounds. A week of hunting showed its effect when thirteen people sustained accidental gunshot wounds. Fourteen falls were recorded with a like number of injuries and one person burned. Three persons suffered infection from getting sandburrs into their hands, one girl was cut, and a woman stepped on a nail. There were six fires.

Farm Accidents Show Lowest Number

Agricultural accidents hit a new low in many weeks with only 21 reported. Twenty persons were injured or killed. One death occurred when part of a haystack fell and struck a farmer on the neck. No disabilities were reported on the farms.

Machinery was the cause of four injuries and horses or cattle were the reason for three of them. Five farmers were injured in falls and three were cut. One man was hurt in a runaway, another sprained his wrist shucking corn, a third suffered an eye injury, and still another crushed his finger while cutting wood. Only one agricultural fire occurred this week.

Industrial Accidents Stay the Same
Accidents in the industrial world tied last week's mark, twenty-six. Injuries and deaths came to twenty-one, however, as compared to nineteen last week. Two workmen died from injuries sustained when they fell fifty feet to the ground. The one disability came from a three-story fall into some light wires. Six workmen were injured by machinery this week, two were burned, and one was cut. Another workman was injured in a fall. Four men were injured by falling objects, one had an eye injury, another fractured his ribs loading cattle at a stockyard, and still another crushed his hand. Five industrial fires were recorded.

Black Widow Spiders Figure Again in Home Accidents

Home accidents increased slightly this week with forty-eight accidents reported as compared to forty-five last week. Twenty-eight were injured or killed in contrast to the twenty-seven of the previous report. Two people died from severe burns this week and a boy from the bite of a Black Widow spider. One woman was disabled in a fall. Twelve were injured by falls in the home and four by burns. Two more were victims of Black Widow spiders. One woman was cut, another caught her hands in a window sash, and a third had a needle lodged in her hand. Washing machine accidents still continue with three more added to the list this week. This makes a total of thirty-eight washing machine accidents in the last sixteen weeks. Fires in the homes came to 22.
