

Southern States Becoming Our Agricultural Competitors

The National Foreign Trade convention has just concluded its 24th annual session. Among their declarations, they made this statement which is of great interest to Nebraskans:

"Cotton, our principal export, has lost its premier position in our foreign trade, because tariff policies and government restrictions on production have caused foreign countries to increase their production to the serious detriment of the American farmer. Should cotton lose its export markets, the Southern fields will, of necessity, be turned to the production of food and feed, for sale in competition with the west and north."

In reply to that it should be known that already the southern farmers are going in strong for alfalfa, for milk, butter and cheese and have hired many dairy experts to develop big dairy herds. They can feed livestock more months out of the year in southern states than we can in Nebraska. Thus the American agriculture map is slowly but surely being changed.

Fancy Price For Sandwich

Meats cost a lot of money in Washington. The cafes and hotels can buy fish cheaper. So they are featuring fish on their menus. One cafe here charges 75 cents for a roast beef sandwich.

Every movie house in town, every newspaper and even speeches on the floor are featuring erroneous statements that the "farmer is in clover." The picture house shows news reels depicting the farmer with great crops and riches. Newspapers print headlines and print figures tending to show that the farmer's condition today is better than ever before. Members from industrial states "kid" farmer members about great crops and great prosperity in the farming sections. Those members coming from farm districts are trying to tell the real story to these easterners who just won't believe that we have another drouth in some of our counties and that the plight of the farmer is serious.

Another Scrap of Paper?

To kill time, the House has been listening to speeches about war in Spain and China. The minority asked that the Administration put the neutrality law into effect in the Far-East. The majority defended the stand of the Administration that no legal war has yet been declared in the Far-East and that so far as Uncle Sam is concerned no war exists there. That, notwithstanding the fact that China has spent over two hundred million dollars for war munitions and Japan has spent about four hundred millions for the same purpose.

Most of the nations of the world have not yet recognized the fact that war is going on in the Far-East. So Uncle Sam follows suit and our neutrality law becomes null and void so far as the Far-Eastern war is concerned, but is effective so far as the Spanish war is concerned. The Spanish war has been declared and the Far-Eastern war isn't recognized officially yet. In the Meantime innocent men and women are being butchered, and the profiteers of war munitions just keep on collecting. Some members feel that the neutrality law the congress passed might as well be thrown into the waste basket.

Ships Become Bullets

Our Merchant Marine is going to advertise for bids to sell some more of the old merchant marine ships. These cost us upwards of half a million dollars each. They sell to brokers for the highest bid. About thirty or more have been already sold. They bring from fifteen to fifty thousand dollars each and are sold for scrap. The brokers in turn sell them to foreign nations. Japan is said to have gotten the last half dozen. The ships are said to be obsolete and after reaching Japan are used for bullets and other war machinery.

Blame Administration For Delay

There is much resentment shown on both sides of the House because the Administration does not have a program outlined for the Congress to work on at this special session. Senators and house members of both parties mince no words in saying so. They declare that it is unfair to taxpayers to stand the expense of this special session if there is really no program to work on. In the Senate debates center around when to start to work. The majority side is having a hard time keeping members in line and forced rolls calls to adjourn are daily occurrences.

Drouth Counties Need More Relief County commissioners and supervisors of drouth counties of the Third district have telegraphed to this office to the effect that they are in need of large WPA quotas and are also in desperate need of a more lenient contribution from sponsors on projects. Unless this is done, they telegraph, their counties will not be able to properly care for relief clients this winter. They are urging that every effort be made in Washington to make farmers eligible for WPA employment. Some of these county officials urge that the state quota be raised to twenty-five thousand. These and other matters effecting our drouth counties are being daily called to the attention of the proper authorities.

THE NEBRASKA SCENE

By the Lowell Service

Charley Bryan, veteran lone wolf of Nebraska democracy, has formally issued his first manifesto of the 1938 campaign thru the press associations. It was expected that Charley would wait for New Year's day, and thus conform to the conventions of politics. Not so the lone wolf. Impelled by editorials in Omaha papers lauding Governor Cochran, Mr. Bryan has thrown his hat into the center of the ring.

"The slogan 'No New Taxes' is just a catch phrase," declared Bryan, "It's sponsors fail to say anything about increasing old taxes."

Bryan has taken the stump in favor of the exemption of homesteads from taxation. In the proposed amendment to the constitution property valued up to $5,000 is to escape taxation.
