So you'll understand

As a telephone user we want you to know what is happening to the telephone business these days.

In peace times, we were able to keep the supply of telephone equipment ahead of the demand for service. But for more than a year copper, rubber and other materials normally used in large quantities by the telephone industry have had to go into fighting equipment.

Our reserves of used telephones and other equipment have been reconditioned and put back into service. This equipment is just as dependable and as serviceable as new equipment. But wartime telephone needs are so great that these, with other measures, haven't been enough and we are nearing the limit of present facilities.

New telephone service for persons defined by Government Order as "essential" users will be provided without delay. However, it no longer is possible to provide as promptly as in the past service for other new customers or additional service for present customers. Facilities shortages in some cases may cause considerable delay in providing service. In most instances, transfer of service for present customers who move will be taken care of with reasonable promptness.

We welcome applications for service and will do our best to meet everyone's requirements as promptly as possible.

Your understanding helps a lot and we thank you for it.
