Congressman Miller's Weekly Letter

Corn Freeze Upsets Feeding Operations. The recent corn freeze has seriously upset feeding operations throughout the country. Of all hogs coming to the Omaha market at least 42% are being penalized because they are either over or under weight—26% weigh over 270 pounds and 16% under 200 pounds. All the markets in the country are glutted with half fed cattle, hogs and sheep because the feeder has no corn to complete his feeding operations. There are now 32% less cattle on feed in Nebraska than last year. It looks as though there might be a heavy liquidation of breeding stock for the next year. Livestock raisers will probably take from one to two dollars less per hundred pounds for their feeders this fall. Our mail indicates a general dissatisfaction with the constant meddling by the OPA and the WFA in the livestock business. These agencies have advisory boards but do not accept their advice unless it conforms to the preconceived ideas of the ill informed members of OPA and WFA.

Annapolis and West Point. I have recently been informed that I will have one vacancy for the classes of 1945 in each of the Academies mentioned above. To give every boy in the district an equal chance I will make my recommendations for appointment on the basis of the grades attained in an examination given by the Civil Service Commission. This examination will be given on July 29, 1944. Those boys desiring to take it should write me not later than June 20, 1944.

Montgomery Ward Seizure. So much has been said about the seizure of Montgomery Ward & Co., by the government, with a display of military power, that people have formed their opinions on the matter. The subsequent return of the property has not altered the facts of the seizure. Investigations have been started in both houses of Congress and, unless choked off by the Administration, they will reveal all the facts surrounding this high handed action. Congressman Carl T. Curtis of Nebraska is one of the minority members of the House Committee. The investigation will reveal why the Attorney General felt that Montgomery Ward was breaking the law known as the Smith-Connolly Act when he could not see that John L. Lewis was breaking it in the miners strike last fall. It hardly looks like even handed justice.

An interesting angle of the case was presented by a statement in a letter received from a friend. It was to the effect that 75% of the people he talked to said they were willing to bet that Congress would holler, rant, stamp their feet and wave their hands about it and call it an outrage but that it would not do one single thing to pass a law to correct it. The "75% of the people" are probably right, but not because individual members of Congress, and especially the Nebraska members, want it that way. If nothing is done to correct the situation it will be because the Administration, by its control of the powerful Rules Committee in the House and equally powerful committees in the Senate can keep bills it opposes from coming to the floor. Only when public opinion is strongly exerted on the members of the majority can this be overcome. Congress has already passed laws governing labor relations in wartime, but laws to be effective must be enforced without fear or favor.

HOW TO SAVE MORE OF THE BABY PIG CROP

Clean, properly-arranged "maternity wards" for this year's pig crop can save the average hog producer more losses, and make him more money, than any other single item in his swine raising program.

In fact, more than one-third of all swine losses are caused by failure to take proper precautions at farrowing time and during the first few weeks after pigs are born. Here are some suggestions that may help prevent these losses. To start out with, a baby pig hasn't much chance to make its owner a profit unless it comes from strong, virile, well-nourished breeding stock. Farmers should take particular care to use breeding animals that are free of brucellosis, which causes far more losses than most owners realize. Before farrowing time, the brood sow should be given well-balanced rations containing sufficient proteins, vitamins and minerals, so she can produce rugged, healthy pigs.

When it is time for farrowing, the sows should have dry, sanitary quarters, with plenty of bedding. Guard rails should be provided to save the pigs from being crushed. Every producer should make a practice of disinfecting the navel stump of pigs at birth, to prevent joint ill and other infections which enter by this route.

At the age of two to three days, the pigs should have access to clean sod or soil, to prevent nutritional anemia. If other disturbances appear, or if the pigs begin to show unthriftiness, a veterinarian should be called to determine the cause because prompt action in correcting such conditions may make the difference between profit and loss on the season's operations. The sows and their litters should be placed on clean pasture, as far as possible from the germs and parasites of old hog lots. At weaning time the pigs should be immunized against cholera, and in erysipelas areas, against erysipelas. These simple steps in getting the young pigs off to a good start can mean a great deal to the coming year's profits.
