IT'S MUNITIONS

It's Munitions Or More Lives, Says Byrnes

Mobilization Director Spins New Parable to Point Up Urgent Need

By CHARLES T. LUCY, Foreign-Home Staff Writer, WASHINGTON.

War Mobilization Director James G. Thompson today said that the munitions they need, and more to spare, he believes they will be saved if they get their "It's Behind This New Push for Greater War Production."

Mr. Byrnes turns parable-maker to a story.

"With a bomb catalog fire, he says, you pour water on it with every bit of pressure in the house."

at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter G. Sire, Sunday afternoon, January 18. A very delicious lunch was served before we started the meeting.

As the president, George Mellor is in the service of his country, his sister, Jenny Beth Mellor, acted as president and called the meeting to order. For the roll call we said the Club pledge. With the exception of Jack Moler and Stanley Benson all the members were present. The minutes then were read by the secretary (acting president also) and were approved.

The first business of the meeting was to elect a new president. Murray Mellor was elected and immediately took office. Then we decided it would be better to elect a new vice president as the present one, Pack Moler, is moving away with his family, and John O'Neill was elected to the office. The leader handed out the material that each member will need for his or her project. The question was brought up whether the meetings should be held monthly or every six weeks. It was decided to hold them monthly.

As he is taking up the duties of a County Agent in Boyd county, W. G. Sire gave a very interesting last speech. As new assistant leader, Arthur O'Neill was elected.

In closing the song leader, Ed Hynes, led us in "Anchors Aweigh" and "Don't Fence Me In."

After the meeting a lovely end table was presented to the Sire family from the Happy Hour Club and the Eagle Creek 4-H Club. There were a few guests present: Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Rohde and son, and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Damero.

ANN DREW stood in her tiny studio looking critically at a set of dress designs thumbtacked against the wall—every detail satisfactory, including the Ann-mark on the pert little face that always topped her work.

The hum from the busy street far below her windows seemed to change into a man's well-remembered comment: "Ann, a face isn't necessary."

"Humph! Not unless I like a face—and I do," she had insisted.

"Yes, particularly that one; it's your own," the man answered. "You're conceited, Ann. Imagine! Conceited about a funny little face with a funny little scar that makes the mouth look a bit one-sided!" But his voice had been soft and right. Then, for the first time, Bert Harris had kissed her.

She took the sketches down and stacked them on her desk. Running an envelope into her typewriter, she addressed it to the Harris Dress Manufacturing company and slid the drawings inside to be mailed.

A door slammed across the hall. Ann winced; the slamming of a door had been Bert's good-bye two months before. The Harris merry-go-round is right back where it started, she mused—business, marriage, strictly business—plus a five-year-old son.

Perhaps there had been too much Ann-this-and-that. But the registered trademark with the Ann Drew signature meant faith in her career and Bert's understanding had not been broad enough to accept her refusal to add the name of Harris.

She decided to go home. Queer! She could finish a series for any other concern and work on. But every Harris envelope sealed, whatever the hour, terminated her working day.

It always had. Eight years before the Harris contract had been the first and only one in her file; a year later because Bert Harris had been her husband and she had crowded his work in at home between busy days at the studio; this season because she became emotionally fatigued each time she outlined the unnecessary little face—every pen stroke tended toward the hope that she might live again in Bert's thoughts.

Slipping into her coat, Ann dialed her apartment. Andrew answered and finally she stopped his chatter long enough to tell him that she was on her way home.

Going down in the elevator she smiled. She knew that Andrew was rushing for his telephone. He would throw one end through the kitchen door. Then he would scamper as far as the long cord would permit to ring the bell and tell old Hannah that Mummy Ann wanted her dinner.

Deciding to walk home through the park, she found herself stopping to rest on a familiar bench. She opened her bag for a cigarette. Holding it between her lips, she started to fumble through her coat pockets for a match but pulled out a large square of colorful rayon instead. Her face brightened as she draped it at arm's length from one hand to set up the grouped tulips plaqued against their background by pairs of Ann-marked lips. She tilted her head and murmured, "My first brass ring in textile!"

A light snow began feathering the early dusk. Dearly, Ann knotted the square about her head. She stood, lifted her face and snugged her collar about her throat. Unmindful of the admiring glance of a man who had settled himself on the other end of the bench a few moments earlier, she felt through her pockets again: "Darn!"

She turned quickly when the man struck a match. He walked over and held it out suggestively. "You didn't find one?"

"Bert! I—I didn't realize that anyone was about."

"I know," Bert parried. "When I came along you seemed rather absorbed—shall we say—in yourself?"

"Why not add 'as usual'?" Ann asked.

"Ann, listen . . ."

Ann's eyes glistened queerly. An ever-alert inner imp impelled her to answer. "Not in this snow. I think, instead, I'll follow the me-first-program you credit me with and take myself home."

Opposite the park, she glanced back but saw only a screen of snowflakes. She shrugged, signaled a taxi and was home in a few minutes.

A half-hour later, the buzzer sounded and she heard Hannah ask someone to wait. When she started toward the living room, the glow from a lamp shone on Andrew's toy telephone as it rang at her feet. She picked it up and listened: "Mummy Ann, Hannah says if t-h-a-t m-a-n wants to stay for dinner, why doesn't he s-a-y so?"

Just then a man's hand touched her arm and Ann felt his face close to hers. "Oh! I didn't know who . . ." she said. Then she smiled and spoke into the telephone: "Andrew, you—you ask him."

Andrew raced through the hall, calling, "Daddy! Daddy, will you s-t-a-y?"

Bert Harris pressed his face closer to Ann's. "You know, I followed you into the park to tell you that I'm thoroughly annexed—and you made me come home alone—all the way."
