At the Mullingar Assizes, in Ireland an action, "Purdon and others against Earl of Longford and others," was heard recently to ascertain the right of claimants to the property of the late Adolph Cooke. The testator died in March, 1876, being then more than 80 years of age. He had never been married, and he had for years been subject to aggravated bodily ailments. He was possessed of valuable property in the county of Westmeath, the rental amounting to about £5,000 pounds annually. He had been in the army, but was generally summoned in remote countries, and never rose beyond the rank of a subaltern. He was a total disbeliever in all religion. revealed or otherwise, and he also repudiated the existence of a God. He was a believer in the trunsmigration of souls. He would not allow his servant to flog a dog, as his notion was that the soul of his grandmother was destined to dwell in a dog at some period or other. His fixed idea was that he was destined to be a fox at some remote period. He believed that all animals were gentle unless provoked by man, and on one occasion he went into a field where there was a bull. He was anxious to conciliate the bull, but the animal did not understand this attention, and very nearly demolished Mr. Cooke. He annually caused sticks to be collected for the crows, to facilitate them in nestbuilding. He thought that trees, when cross-cut, would have no difficulty in growing if again stuck into the ground. Mr. Cooke also refused to allow himself to be buried in consecrated ground. He caused a tomb to be built for himself in a field, at a cost of $60. In that tomb
