Hopkin's Experiment. The inextinguishable batred with which the people of Arizona regard the Apache Indians was excited by a somewhat singular circumstance. Many years ago a friend of ours named. Horkins, who was an enthusiast upon the subject of music, conceived an idea that the surest way of civilizing the red man would be to bring him under the southing influences of the divine art. Johnny's Dreauful Punishment. Johnnie had been naughty. It's astonishing how naughty 2-year-old babies can be when they try; and Johnnie had tried. His blue eyes didn't look as blue as usual, and his hair wasn't as golden, and instead of a bright smile 2 cunning-oh! dear, what am I saying!"an ugly pout rested on his pretty little mouth. There he stood in the middle of the floor, baby fists on baby hips feet very wide apart and sweetest-I mean the mightiest--wee rebel that ever defied mamma. Just hink of it only two years old, detying mamma! "Will you be good?" asked mamma sternly, "No, mamma," replied Johnnie. Mamma opened her eyes-they were not as blue as Johnnie's-very wide, "You won't?" she said, "No ma'am," repeated Johnnie. "Then," said she, solenmly, "you must be punished. Go into the store-room and stay in there until you can say "Yes, ma'am. Johnnie went, and mamma closed the door, expecting to hear the wished-for "Yes" shouled forth instantly. But, to her great surprise, she heard not a word or ery. "Five minutes passed; utter silence. Ten minutes went by; no! the slightest sound; and manning began to grow impatient-for, after the manner of mammas, she was longing to kiss and forgive her boy. "Oh! the blessed darling," she said to herself, as the twelfth minute stole away; "the panishment is too dreadful for him. How could I have been so hard-hearted? To shut a merry little thing like that in a dark place; a baby, that should never be out of sunshine except when he's asleep; it's too bad." And she flew to open the closet door. "John," as his father calls him, looked up at her, his whole face spatkling with fun. The blue had come back to his eyes and the lips. In his chubby hand he held the last piece of what, just fourteen minutes before, had been a fine, brown, fragrant, fresh-baked loaf of cake, Crumbs covered his face from chin to eyes, his cheeks shone, and sundry crisp fragments clung to his neck and bib, "Good gracious!" said mamma. "Dood take!" said Johnnie.- Madge Elliott in Baldwin's Monthly.
