The Eastern Question and the War. gradually became a political problem | Europe. involving the existence of some nations, the commercial supremacy of others, and the success or defeat of distinctive | ceded from certain provisions of the national policies.

The Christian Church was for many on the Black Sea. She began the work centuries a united body, with power centering at Rome. When Constantine acade Constantinople the capital of the noman Empire the bishop of the new capital became the rival of the Roman Pontiff, and aspired to exclusive dominion over the church. This led to a bitter quarrel, and finally to separation between the East and the West-bet men the Greeks and Latins. Constantinople remained the actual capital of the Roman Empire and head of the under the protection of the European Eastern or Greek Church, while Rome was the head of the Latin or Roman Catholic Church.

The western portion of the empire was overrun by the northern barbariand and several kingdoms were founded on the ruins. Charlemagne united these in one empire, of which France was the head, with recognition of Rome as the head of the Western Church. All this time the Eastern or Greek Propire had been in existence with Constantinople as the head of the church and the seat of government. The West was hostile to the East, and church and national policies were shaped on this basis. The crusaders of the West even went so far as to turn z aside from their attempts to recover Jerusalem from the Turks to capture and pillage Constantinople, the capital of the Christians of the East. . This blow was a serious one, and from it dates the decline of the Eastern or Greek Empire. The empire and the church went down with the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453. The Turkish policy was to trample out the Eligion of the East, as well as the political spirit, and centuries of cruel struggle ensued. The Christians of the northern sections found a friend in Young Russia. That nation adopted from the first the Greek faith and worship, and become its champion. The struggling nations of the East turned naturally to her, and she rose rapidly in power. She inherited the quarrel with the Catholic powers of the West, and all her people hated the • Tur. Her national policy was relentlessly aggressive. Her aim was to repossess the countries of the Eastern Empire, and, above all, to recapture Constantinople. That city was to the Russian the holy city, and, in rounding out the boundaries of his empire, he, in the earlier stages of the struggle, never lost sight of the purpose to regain the old capital. This spirit, entering into a national policy, became threatening to Western Europe, and, as the gov ernment of Russia schemed for commercial as well as political ascendency, the commercial nations of the West shaped their policy to oppose any such consummation. This feeling entered into all alliances and combinations, and the West, being strong politically and commercially, has prevailed. The West drove the Turk from her every state or nation, but she has resisted every attempt of the East to drive the same people from her old empire. This is one phase of the case.

· Politically, Russia has always been the friend and ally of every nation opposed to the Turk. She has been in sympathy with the rebels in every revolutionary or insurrectionary movement in Turkey, because the insurrectionists were Christians of the Greek Church. She early conquered Moldavia and Wallachia, and compelled Turkey to grant concessions to the Christians of other northern provinces. The war of 1828-9 grew out of her interference in behalf of the Greeks in their struggle for liberty a few years before. She undertook this war, however, under pledges to Great Britain and France that it should not be a war of conquest. If Russia absorbed Turkish territory, gaining absolute control of the Black Sea, and valuable ports on the Medi terranean, the commercial interests of the Western nations would suffer, and on this ground the Turk was better than the Russian. Russia made peace when she had virtually conquered Turkey, and this was "in the interests of Europe." The Herzegovinian insurrection of two years ago was the rebellion of the Christians of that province against Turkish taxation and persecution. Servia was drawn into the conflict. And as Servia was a creation of the treaty of Paris-made semi-independent under the rule of native princes and placed powers, although tributary to Turkey -all Europe became incidentally interested. European interference compelled a truce, and negotiations were commenced looking to a permanent peace. Russia secretly assisted Servia in the struggle against Turkey, and demanded that the great powers should interfere in behalf of the Christians of the northern provinces. Certain reforms were demanded, and these met the approval of England, France, Germany, and Austria. Turkey adopted a new constitution and announced her intention to carry out reforms herself. Russia held that this was a mere promise, and demanded that certain plans should be followed. Turkey rejected all plans and denied the right of any power to interfere. Russia proposed powers signed this, but Turkey rejected

it, and, in rejecting it, denied the right deem best. While Turkey clings to the treaty of Paris the other powers hold that she has practically ignored it. Montenegro has been for two centuies a bone of contention. The Turks claimed it as a part of the Ottoman Empire, but the Montenegrins resisted every attempt to subdue them, and as early as the beginning of the eighteenth century asked the aid of Russia. For many years Montenegro has been a semiindependent State under the protection of Russia. And whenever there has been a rebellion or insurrection in the Christian provinces of Turkey, Montenegro, with or without the encouragement of Russia, has plunged into the conflict. She was fighting in 1861, and she joined Servia in the late war with Turkey, and it is to be noticed that while the Servians were defeated the Montenegrins were not. The question of peace with Montenegro is now one of the elements contributing to present complications. As to the present attitude of the nations little can be said with certainty. The ancient Turkish policy was to crush and virtually enslave the Christians conquered. It meant neither toleration nor consideration. The interference of Russia and other nations has secured a modification of this policy, and now Turkey expresses a willingness to carry out all needed reforms. Her position is that she will do herself all that is asked, but she will not allow either Russia or Europe to superintend it. Austria, lying to the north of Turkey, must shape her policy so as not to endanger Hungary and the part of Poland in her dominions. The Poles and Hungarians are anti-Russian in feeling, and bitterly so. Some years ago an alliance was formed between Russia, Austria. and Germany, but whether this had any bearing on the Eastern question is not known. While Austria is interested in maintaining a friendly attitude toward Russia, her interests as they appear on the surface will not permit her to join with Russia in a war against

The Shortest Deed on Record. Scribner for May contains a paper of Reminiscences of Washington," from unpublished family records. Among the anecdotes of Washington there related is the following:

In August, 1796, after a few delightful days spent with their distinguished relatives, Captain Lewis relates that the following conversation took place at the breakfast table the morning fixed for their departure.

Washington was, as all the world knows, a man of few words, and while he quietly partook of his frugal meal the conversation flowed cheerfully on between the other members of the family present. Suddenly his nephew turned laughing to him and said:

"Uncle, what do you think I dreamed

The General replied he could not guess, and asked to be told. Captain Lewis, continuing to laugh merrily, re-

"Why, I dreamed you gave me your farm on Deep Run.'

"Humph!" ejaculated his uncle. "You had better have dreamed I gave you Mount Vernon."

No more was said on the subject, and Captain Lewis had quite forgotten his unmeaning dream as he placed his wife in the carriage, and bade his uncle and aunt good-bye. Washington followed him to the carriage, and handed him a folded paper, saying as he did so: "You can look at that when you reach home." Captain Lewis received the paper in astonishment, but could make no reply, as the carriage now rolled swiftly away. He might have felt in duty bound to suffer the pangs of curiosity until he reached home, but his wife had no such conscientious scruples; she had not been forbidden to open it, and so she soon succeeded in gaining rossession of the mysterious paper, and before Mount Vernon was lost in the distance she discovered the fact that they had left that modest dwelling much richer than they were when they entered it. bestow the Deep Run farm in his will upon his nephew, and only hastened the time of the gift, or whether, with the quiet humor in which he rarely indulged, he thus proved the dream of which he had been told a practical reality, was never known. The deed is said to be the shortest on record, and is

We are constrained to say this of that staunch old fire insurance company-the "Burlington," of Burlington, Iows-of which our sister city should feel proud, not only from reading the statistics of the company, but from the many and favorable notices of it by the press, and from the opinions of reliable insurance men who are posted in the business and are supposed to know; and still further, for the reason that having an institution of the kind at home-put us down first, last and all the time in favor of fostering a home enterprise. of Fauquier, unto my Nephew Robert | Camcer is Certainly Curable. It is the common impression that cancer, the most terrible of the numerous ills to which poor humanity is subject, is absolutely incurable. It is a fact that physicians themselves are of the opinion, and in practice apply the cruel knife to patients suffering from cancer. with no hope of helping them to a permanent cure. And yet why should this of all disease resist the medical art; defy the physician's skill! Is it possible that nature affords a cure for every other physical affliction, withholding its beneficent curative agents from the cancer afflicted alone? It must be that man is at fault, not nature. Medical scientists have either failed in comprehending cancer, or they have not sufficiently pried into nature to discover what remedy she affords for the awful Dr. F. L. Pond. of Aurora, has demonstrated that, the world to the contrary, cancer can be cured. The writer knows nothing of his remedy or the method of its application beyond the fact that the doctor puts no faith in the scalpel, relying upon local treatment with the preparation known only to himself; but the writer does know, for he has seen, its effects. Dr. Pond's treatment is so generally successful that it may be said that his remedy is an absolute certainty. Before the potent operation of his never-failing specific, every root and branch of the consuming cancer perishes, and, when he pronounces his patient cured, not a vestige of the life-destroying tumor is visible in the sys-tem. It is killed for all time, and life is saved. He has taken patients whose lives were des-paired of, who had been informed by the very best of physicians that it was not within the power of their art to aid them, and he has res cued them from the jaws of death; restored them to health and happiness. The writer has seen one cancerous tumor weighing five pounds, which, without the aid of a knife, the loctor removed from the breast of one lady who is now rapidly recovering normal health. He has conversed with another lady, who was elieved by the doctor of a cancer in the neck, and with a number of gentlemen from whom the doctor had removed cancers, all of whom had entirely recovered. With scarcely a trace upon their persons of the awful scourge which was hurrying them along a painful pathway to a certain grave, they had good reason to bless as they ardently did, the man whose skill had saved them. Since Dr. Pond comme naking a specialty of cancer, the knowledge o is success has spread abroad throughout the and, and the demands upon his services have ome from every quarter of the country. In order the better to accommodate the large number of patients who place themselves under his immediate care, he has established in Aurora what, ordinarily, would be called hospital, but what, under his humane an kindly management, is really a home. In the enter of a three-acre lot, situated in the nidst of the choice residence portion of the beautiful city, stands a fine, large, commodi-ous edifice which he purchased especially for the accommodation of his patients. The grounds are luxuriously shaded, and are orna-mented as well by shrubs and flowers. The spot is a delightful one, a better, more salubri-ous and inviting one an invalid could not wish for. any disease deserves the name of universal, it is this. Dietetic errors and the follies which Fashion imposes upon us tend to foster and diseminate it. To the pitiful cry of its victims. "is there any cure for Catarrh!" there is but one answer consistent with Christian reason. God has never sent one evil into the world for which he has not sent the remedy. For the greatest of all spiritual and moral evils, the Great Physician has prescribed a potent and never-falling remedy. He has given explicit rules for the treatment and preservation of the entritual and moral man, but He is silent in all matters relating to the physical man. It would be an unwarrantable detraction from His beneficent character to suprose that He has afflicted the greater portion of humanity with an incurable disease. The day of plagues is past. The God of Christianity is a God of Love, of Mercy, His message is "good will to all men." The earth and all contained therein was intended by the great Designer to supply man's wants; and surely he has no greater wants than remedies for his infirmities. Science is rapidly proving that the earth is fitted to supply man's utmost need. New medicinal plants are constantly being discovered and new properties developed from those already known. For Catarrh, the most potent remed vet discovered is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy Its efficacy has been tested in many thousand cases with uniform success. Cases that had been repeatedly pronounced incurable, readily visided to it. In confirmed, or obsti nate cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be taken in connection

Nature, in her luxuriance, has clothed the hills and the dales with berb and shrub, whose occult natures merely require the earnest application of the scientific and inquiring mind to reveal their curative properties, for in the vegetable world a kindly providence has placed healing for all nations. The only specifics for any disease yet discovered are vegetable in their nature, and while quintine has been ac cepted as the only remedy for one class, the extract of the Buchu plant is rapidly taking its place as a sovereign remedy for other those ills which afflict humanity. The type disease to which it is remedial is a broad one and its manifestations are legion, but it may be stated in general terms that all diseases the urinary organs, whether caused by climate irregularity, or self-generated, submit at once to the operation of its power. Helmbold's Buchu for all such complaints, is the result of long research, and is acknowledged superior to all other preparations.
