HASTINGS, NEB.

on they are apt to attribute their good fortune to their good farming, and as long as the seasons are favorable, they are good farmers, but let an average or poor season cut their crops short and down goes the country in which they live, or the folly of shallow plowing, insufficient harrowing, poor seed and other like cause's soon looms up before them and they wonder why they had not discovered it before, that we find "fair weather farmers" as well as "fair weather sailors."

Our past is a noble experience to the Nebraska farmer. Our grasses, our soil and our climate has been thoroughly tested and as we have an extensive though going progressive set of farmers we will expect to make the most of these in the developing, the fruits of their labor. Among the various implements that are designed to be labor saving, is the self binder attached to the harvester. We have seen some of them at work and pronounced them the very thing, the grain raser needs, the expense of them is enormous, beyond the reach of ordinary farmers, this exigency must be met in some way. A farmer cannot pay over $200 for a machine that will harvest his grain and bind it. There are too many risks to run that may involve him, and become ruinous. This fact all farmers know either by experience or observation.

On the B. & M. railroad, freights cost $2.12 per day, passenger engine $3.49, freight engineers, $3.49; passenger conductor, $9.00 per month; freight conductor, $67.50; baggage men, $50; and brakemen, $45; track hands $1.10 per day.

State Journal: The B. & M. land office is thronged daily with Eastern land buyers. The samples of Nebraska-grown cereals in the windows, are the great attraction.

Recently while two boys aged respectively 9 and 6 were bathing in wood river a few miles from Kearney, they were attacked by a full grown American Bald Eagle measuring seven feet from tip to tip of the wings, which swooped down upon them, they finally succeeded in drowning him.

State Journal: We learn from a gentleman living in Cass county that the hog colors has broken out in the vicinity of Greenwood and Ashland. The owner of a herd of about one hundred and fifty head was throwing them daily about six. Mr. Loder, one of the oldest settlers in that section, and the owner of three hundred head, is feeding a preparation of sulphur, and as yet has not lost a single hog.

Customer REMAINS.

Col. M. V. Sheridan, has returned from the battle-field, where he went, commissed by the government, to examine and bring back to civilization the remains of several officers who fell there. The remains of the following officers were unmistakably identified: Gen. Custer, his brother Col. Tom Custer, Col. Keogh, Col. Cook, Capt. Yates, and Lieuts. Smith, Calhoun, Crittenden and Reilly. They had been buried just as they had fallen, with the single exception of Col. Custer, who had received interment alongside his brother. The grave of the Custers was near the summit of a little knoll, right where the gallant soldier had taken his last stand. The ground for two hundred feet around was filled with remains. Over sixty men had been killed on that little elevation. The surface of the knoll was strewn with dry bones of horses, which were bleached to the whiteness of ivory. From the position of these bones it was evident to the observer that the horses had been shot for the purpose of forming a breastwork. It looked as if the Indians had been led into a position describing a half circle and then shot in their tracks.

In one or two instances shards of clothing were found adhering to the remains of soldiers, and in one or two graves the slightest trace of hair was discovered. In most cases the bones had separated though there were one or two exceptions in which the anatomy adjoined together perfectly.

The remains of Lieutenant Crittenden was given permanent burial on the spot where he fell. This was done to the wishes of his father, who directed the removal of his son's bones. A neat pine box, containing his disinterred anatomy, was placed in the grave, and a cedar stake bearing his name and number of his regiment, was driven down at the head of his coffin. To the mean time the bones of the other seven officers had been placed in coffins and conveyed into camp. On Col. Sheridan's arrival at Fort Sedgewick the coffins were delivered to Lieut. Chubb, post-quarter master, who turned them over to Col. Tilford, commanding at Fort Lincoln. As soon as the caskets can be procured the remains will be permanently interred. Those of Gen. Custer will be interred at West Point. The bones of Col. Keogh, Capt. Yates, and Lieuts. Smith, Calhoun, and McDonald will be removed to the national cemetery at Leavenworth, Kansas. The remains of the other officers will be delivered to such relatives as may claim them.

The great bulk of our harvest is past, each row reveals some important items for farmers to think upon, their crops are light they easily are to be harvested, and the next crop will be a heavy one.
