There are two sides to the question of regulating the practice of medicine that the legislature shall do. We be lieve there is some sort of "regulation" about the practice of law. But i practically amounts to nothing-that an ovster supper cannot overcome There is also room for the question, whether it is so indispensibly necess ary in medicine. Besides, the fact that it is so eagerly sought by the "regulars," as a sort of monopoly, rather than by the people themselves, is a little suspicious. Th doctors seem to be a good deal more anxious to "protect" the dear people than the people are to receive their protection. Why not let doctors tand or fall, on their own reputations, the same as most other professionals?
