THE WAY-SIDE WELL

He stopped at the way-side well. Where the water was cool and deep: There were feathery ferus 'twixt the mossy And gray was the old well-sweep. He left his carriage alone:

Nor could coacuman or footman tell Why the master's opped in the dusty road To drink at the wa -side well. Heswayed with his gloved hands The well-sweep creasing and slow,

The water plashed back below. He lifted it to the earb, And bent down to the bucket's brim; No turrows of time or care had marked The face that looked back at him.

He saw but a farmer's boy As he steeped o'er the brim to drink, That met his over the bring.

The eyes were sunny and clear, And the brow undimm id by care, While, from under the brim of the old straw

Strayed curls of chestnut hair. He turned away with a sigh-Nor could coachman or footman tell Why the master stopped in his ride that day

The question was how to hurry his Western farm quickly into a doubt absurd to the listener, as it will stock-men took their stock off of the thing which more than another we all bott in for about two weeks, until veztion. But there is a deep meaning in the expression. It means that if a property is to increase in value, one must do something himself to make it more valuable, even at the risk of higher taxation. We may carry this idea into all our worriments, and especially this one of weeds in the public highways. The more we beautify our properties, the more we attract travel by it: for people will go in preference where there is something nice to be seen. Improvements cost something. They are taxes.
