THE MIDNIGHT TRAIN.

Across the dull and brooding night A giant flies with demon light,
And breath of wreathing smoke;
Around him whirl the reeling plair. And with a dash of dim disdain He cleaves the sundered rock.

In lonely swamps the low wind stirs.
The belt of black functial firs, That murmur to the sky, Till, startled by his mad career, As if a god swept by.

Through many a dark, wild heart of heath; O'er booming bridges, where beneath A mighty river brawls; By mins remnants of the nast. Their ivies trembling in the blast;

The slumb'rer on his silent bed Turns to the light his lonely head, Divested of its dream; Long leagues of gloom are hurried o'er Through tunnel sheaths, with iron roar, Past huddling buts, past flying farms,

High furnace flames, whose crimson arms Are grappling with the night, He tears along receding lands. To where the kingly city stands,

Here, round each wide and gushing gate, A crowd of eager faces wait, And every smile is known. We thank thee, O, thou Titan train. That in the city once again We clasp our loved, our own.

We mentioned some months ago a Kansas case holding a company liable for injuries which a boy, while playing about a disused turn-table, sustained through its defective condition. From man's employment. a recent decision it appears that the right of small boys in Kansas to play feet long, and inclined four and a half feet in that distance; so that a car switched off upon it needed to be fastened, else it would run down the grade. The cars were usually fastened by means of the brakes. But the boys of the place were addicted to climbing upon the cars, loosening the brakes and taking a free ride down. This was not done by consent of the company; on the contrary, it was forbidden.
