A Century of Methodism.

The twenty-fourth quadrennial session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, met yesterday in Philadelphia, fifty marks an important epoch in the history of American Methodism; for it precedes by only a few months the completion of the first centenary of the corporate life of the Methodist Church in the United States. The first General Conference met at Baltimore, on December 24, 1774, and is popularly known as the "Christmas Conference." Methodism was not strong in those days; even its name was a stigma fixed upon it by its enemies. But its leaders were men of large faith and indomitable pluck; and the organization which they then perfected has proved to be one of the most marvelous agencies of modern Christendom.

Its century of life is filled with stories of apostolic zeal and heroic self-denial. Its evangelists and colporteurs have penetrated to every portion of the land, and its missionary societies have been lavish in their contributions to the cause of the Church. No other body of Christians has done more to commend itself to the American people. From the days when Wesley and Whitefield, Ashbury and Coke arose with such power to proclaim the necessity of vital religion, until the present time, Methodism has been a great moral force in the world, leading men up to homely but real conceptions of righteousness.

And it is no disparagement to other communions to say that Methodism in some respects is the truest reflex of the religious thought of the common people in America. It represents the great body of the people—the farmer, the artisan and the workingman. Its simple Gospel message, its fervid enthusiasm, its practical ways of expressing itself in its evangelistic work, the elasticity of its services, and the prominent part which it gives to its laity in those services—all these features have endeared the Methodist communion to the people. It is but fair to add that it has been indefatigable in bringing its message of mercy to the homes of the poor and the lowly throughout the land. As a guardian and teacher of morality, as a preacher of a gospel of peace and good will toward men, it justly takes an honorable place in the ranks of evangelical Christendom.

The present General Conference will be composed of delegates from ninety-seven annual conferences, representing about 13,000 itinerant and more than 12,000 local ministers and 1,800,000 lay members. The ten bishops of the Church will also be present. The Conference will probably continue in session about a month, and as it is the highest ecclesiastical and legislative body in the Church its session is looked forward to with much interest.—New York Tribune.

It has ever been true since Adam was a boy that the good wife of every household sought to keep her husband pleased by a well supplied table. How easy it is for the more fortunate wives of the present day, where science and skill has produced such an article as De-Land's Chemical Baking Powder for their use. Read the statement on the label. Sold in cans only, full weight, full strength, always pure.
