The Siamese make wedding presents, but they never give an odd number of articles, for the reason, they say, that one can not stand without a partner, three means enmity, and five sickness. On the other hand, two signifies "strong and welcome," four, "laughter," six, "binding together by love," and eight, "we resemble each other in likes and dispositions."

The project of building a narrow-gauge railway between Siam and Burma has been revived since the fall of Khartoum has made it imperative that reinforcements should be sent by that route. Several firms of railway engineers and contractors have offered to construct the road, and ask no payment until it is completed. Some of them promise to build a single-track road, with sidings, water-tanks and stations, at an average speed of twenty miles per day.
