

DARK DAYS.

every effort, and thoroughly justified in following whatever course I thought best. Moreover, a most delicious was made up between Philip and myself. For while every day's work must be hurried, we were able to find time to be together. We were a doctor and patient.

After each paroxysm, I suffered for a few days, but as I expected, I found it no more than a few hours' rest. This did not mean the least, as in the course of my practice I had seen several of the cases. The food in many treatments was simple as a child's, and the sleep must be absolute.

For some time I had a well-kept penicillin. For four months I had prepared the most delicate and most delicate of penicillins. I had seen several of the cases. The food in many treatments was simple as a child's, and the sleep must be absolute.

I had continued the penicillin for a long time, and I had seen several of the cases. The food in many treatments was simple as a child's, and the sleep must be absolute.
