DO YOU KNOW
LORRY'S GLEAZ
The new adhesive cloth Gleaz is being introduced as a substitute for all "glue" and "putty" for all kinds of work. It is made by Lorry & Co. of New York. It is a new and improved adhesive, and is the best of its kind. It is made of the finest materials, and is the only one that will hold on to anything. It is the only one that will hold on to anything. It is the only one that will hold on to anything.

As a class, railroad engineers in active service are exceptionally temperate men. The daily performance of their duty requires a clear brain and steady nerve, which is very soon broken up by any use of alcohol.
The nerve tension to which they are subjected in active work produces after a time many and profound nerve disorders. One of the signs of breaking down in this class is excessive nervousness and timidity. Often men who have had an accident and escaped without any external injury will soon exhibit signs of mental shock, in what is called "shaking of the nerves," or "childish caution." They will always be late, they will "shut down" and shirk their work, they will no longer be able to handle their work, and have to be changed to other work. Insomnia and dyspepsia are also common signs of exhaustion. After a day's run, they will be unable to sleep or properly digest food, and alcohol in some form will be found to give relief. This will soon verge into insanity, and the drinking will be confined to the hours after the work is over. During the day they drink nothing, except perhaps beer, and that in great moderation; but when night comes they use spirits to excess again. After a time such men will show marks of excessive caution or recklessness, and be very irregular in their management of the engine. They will have broken journals and broken engines beyond the average experience.

These and many other indications soon render them unfit for the work. It is the opinion of a competent authority that an engineer who begins to drink will be, as a rule, obliged to give up work in two years from general insobriety, although his use of spirits may be at home and largely concealed, and what is called general moderation. A fact has recently come to my notice with its explanation that is of unusual interest. On a through line running out from New York it has been observed that nearly all the engineers who were changed and discharged for drinking were on the night train, and were considered the most temperate. The conclusion was that men on these night runs were more likely to drink, and the individual opinions of railroad managers agree on this point.—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

The Boston Young Woman
It is a great mistake, writes a Boston correspondent to the Kansas City Times, to imagine that prostitutes, like the vulgar and low class are the characteristics of Boston women now. No such thing; they are vast numbers of French coquette in rectangular habits. For the women here are so that the upper and the lower do not include them all. I wish I could trust my pen to picture for you some one or more of the Boston girls one sees on Commonwealth Avenue or Beacon Street of a pleasant afternoon. They are not to be equaled. And remember that I am impartial enough, for Boston girls are not my favorites as a rule. Not "finesse" with its woman of mercenary cunning, but the Boston girl, with its woman of general rounded figure and dark eyes and hair not New York, with its woman of general carriage and easy unconcernedness not one of these can show you the type of a beautiful Boston girl. She has that hair that looks as though it were real and comes down over the forehead and curls around the neck, and that clear complexion that is not made up, but that makes one think of a baby's skin in a lily, well-out nose and mouth, the low Greek forehead with the hair brushed off it, the fat back and well-turned shoulders of an English girl, and the nervous, plant movement in action of an athlete; the sides and hips trim, curves and about the waist, and the carriage about with her a look of the kind of atmosphere that makes one's eyes brighten and nerves tingle at the sight of health so charmingly housed. And there is no nonsense and no morbidness in her make-up. Health is a sure safeguard against them. She may "blat" that women will not! But even then it is in a manner that says, "I have a more game of life-and-death, with an object beyond a wholesale trying of the attractive things. You can't compare as these are, after all, the ordinary of a part of the problem. So her with such a mother will not bludgeon it; he knows he must look into her eyes after work; and no man will be content of other men's property, wealth and happiness and treatment of her."

A Hint from a View of It
We suppose Miss Mackay, by marriage to a prince, became a princess. The one had wealth and the other a title, neither of which they have ever done anything to earn, for themselves. The marriage is a match in which both are so likely to be shown as to make it winning. Wealth and title are both contributing to a certain, well balanced mind, and will move us to a large, generous, hungry heart. We should have thought more of Miss Mackay if she had married some American of distinction and ability, rather than one having chiefly for his name. Or if she were married to some young foreign prince, she would have thought her title more available and her name more likely to be happy.—Miss Mackay.
