

THE RED CLOUD CHIEF

A. C. HOSMER, Proprietor. FRIDAY OCTOBER 2, 1885.

9 Per Cent Farm Loans. The Nebraska Farm Loan Co. will make you a loan on your farm at straight 9 per cent and furnish the money without any delay.

Shilhouette. WHERE is Moses, What is he about, Where is Moses, Has his light gone out?

Obituary. If so soon to be done for, What was I ever begun for?

EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

HONEY at Hacker's. THE familiar cry, "Oh, where is he?" THE Commissioners meet October 6.

THE Rev. H. McMeekin was in the city this week. GEO. GILFORD has been on the sick list for a few days.

D. F. TRUNKY has his new home ready for the plasterer. J. H. SMITH and wife have returned home from the frontier.

A. N. PALMER has our regards for a mammoth watermelon. A NEW band was organized in Red Cloud last Monday night.

A. N. EBY is too happy over the arrival of an heir to estate. THE QUI VIX FIRE department is now engaged in practicing.

THE ladies aid society meets at Mrs. Walsworth's this Friday afternoon. Mrs. J. M. PROCTOR of Chariton, Iowa is in the city visiting relatives.

THE new M. E. Church pastor will be in Red Cloud in about three weeks. THE ground has been broken for the new school building to the south end.

S. P. FOX, living across the river, is the happy father of a bouncing baby boy. Our friend, John Fulton, of Riverton told THE CHIEF a pleasant call this week.

JOHN MOORE, cashier of the First National Bank, was in Lincoln this week. He has gone to "that country from whence no traveler returns," says the whigwump.

S. LINTON, living near Riverton, committed suicide last Saturday, we understand. JIM POTTER lost a valuable cow the other day. It was drowned in the Republican river.

Save money by getting your farm loans from W. P. Overman. Money furnished promptly. THE board of education are having numerous repairs made and preparing generally for winter.

A WEBSTER county farmer saved sixty dollars by getting his farm loan from W. P. Overman. XAVIER DEMARS, of Wheatland, one of Webster county's prosperous farmers, was in Red Cloud Tuesday.

THE average bus driver will be calling out in stentorian voice next week, "All aboard for the fair grounds, going right out!" THE machine repairing department of the B. & M. in this city has made more repairs this month than at any other time for years.

A. A. POPE, our south end implement dealer, is erecting a large storage room on his lots, at the corner of Second Avenue and Webster street. REV. HARRIS, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church in this city, and now of the North Platte county, was in the city the latter part of last week.

MARK WAESER was thrown from a mowing machine on Tuesday and considerably bruised and shaken up, but fortunately not seriously injured. STICK to the ticket, boys; don't let your angry passions rise, and swear vengeance because the balance of the boys didn't play as you wanted them to.

DON'T forget the Webster county fair next week. The exhibition in Webster county should come and spend at least one day. A grand good time is expected. HENRY COOK'S building, which has been standing in front of THE CHIEF office for several months, has weighed anchor and is now harbored north of A. B. Kaley's.

C. W. WENGER will be comfortably situated in his new and handsome store room this week. His building is certainly the very finest that we have ever seen in Nebraska. THERE will be an entertainment for the benefit of the W. C. T. U. next Friday evening, at the house of Mr. Henry Fulton, two doors north of Mr. Fob's. All are invited.

COME to the fair and see the best display that has ever been made. New grounds, new sheds, and everything new. Premiums large and paid in cash. Come with the crowd and bring your families and articles for exhibition. THE Oberlin and Republican City branch of the B. & M. Ry. will be in running order October 1, and through trains will run from Red Cloud to Oberlin. We understand that Red Cloud will be the eastern division of this new route.

Is another column of to-day's paper will be found the advertisement of A. Cook, the only exclusive boot and shoe dealer in Red Cloud, and we take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to his advertisement, feeling assured that they will profit by calling on him. OUR friend, W. H. Wheeler, a prominent business man of Clinton, Illinois, and Messrs. LeBounty and Hathaway, of Guide Rock, were pleasant callers at these headquarters this week. Mr. Wheeler owns a fine farm in Beaver Creek precinct, and is out in God's country to look after it.

OUR enterprising opera house managers have gone to the expense of four or five hundred dollars and will light the Opera House with gas. There will be over 40 jets, including the footlights. THE Opera House will be opened about the 15th of October, we understand, by one of the finest theatrical companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

REPORTORIAL POINTS

Cranberries at Hacker's. VINT LULLOW is very sick.

Mrs. M. W. DICKERSON has returned home. S. F. SPOKESFIELD has returned from Hebron.

Buckwheat flour and maple syrup at Hacker's. W. H. LINDOW has returned home from Indiana.

Mrs. F. E. HATCH arrived in the city today from Illinois. A DAUGHTER of Mr. S. Perkins, from Denver, is in the city.

9 percent loans at the Nebraska & Kansas Farm Loan Co. SITH ANGER, of Iowa, an early Nebraska settler, is in the city.

We understand that a new brick block is to go up soon on the up town block. Loans made with the Nebraska & Kansas Farm Loan Co. can be paid at home.

Wonder if the Hel met grip contained the "Ohio idea" when it crossed the old bridge. JERRY OENDEUFF takes the cake for large potatoes. He raised 13 bushels from a peak of soil planted.

Lost—Two boys' coats. The finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving them at Mr. Hester's store. MARRIED by S. West, Mr. Isaac P. Redding and Miss Mary E. Bird of Salem, Kansas, September 29.

W. STEWART, of Diller, Nebraska, has been visiting T. J. Wright this week. He paid THE CHIEF a pleasant call.

Mr. ROLLS and Miss Campbell were married on the 26th, by Rev. George Hummel, at his residence on Ash Creek. Mr. HUMPHREYS' little daughter died last week from diphtheria. The family have the sympathy of their many friends.

A. H. COPELAND and son traveled 360 miles into Kansas, built two frame houses and returned in 21 days. A good record. FRANK BASOME, Upland P. O., Kas., sold his fine farm to Mr. M. R. Bent the other day. The farm is said to be as fine a farm as there is in Jewell county.

THE Helmet has the grip and it intends to hold it, and don't you forget it, Helmet. Wonder if the "grip" didn't go to Kansas via the old bridge?

THE 1885 tax list is now in the hands of Treasurer Buschlow. All persons who pay taxes should not fail to bring their road money along and save the treasurer a great deal of trouble.

OVER a demonstration was made on Tuesday Saturday by the boys who are theatrical inclined. They had a whole caravan of animals, from an elephant down to a hippopotamus.

We understand that Mr. Outwaite and Dr. Sherer have traded stores and lots. Dr. Sherer getting the lot and building where Hacker's store is, and Outwaite gets Sherer's corner and buildings.

WANTED—Information concerning the whereabouts of one King Moses supposed, while laboring under a temporary mental aberration, to have wandered over the old bridge and got lost in the wilds of Kansas.

THERE are lots of new goods rolling in as usual at Henry Cook's. The people of Red Cloud will have the greatest variety of fine goods for presents, toys, and books that has ever been seen here, and all at prices that cannot be beaten in the state.

ED PARKER's heavy horse took it into his head to run away Tuesday. In the buggy was the Mrs. E. and Wm. Park and Miss Lucy Parks. They were all thrown from the vehicle and seriously bruised and the buggy was pretty well dilapidated. It was a narrow escape.

THE QUI VIX FIRE department were in Guide Rock last Thursday night where they rendered their drama, "The Veteran of 1812 or Koshish and the Scout". Through some misunderstanding the people of Guide Rock did not patronize the boys very well, but they missed a rare treat.

R. F. MEZER, the Opera House grocer, is going to reduce his stock to make room for new goods, so call and see him if you want bargains in quonessware, crockery, provisions, etc. His motto: "First class goods, more of them, and at lower prices than any other house in Red Cloud."

DON'T forget the fair next week everywhere in the county should come as it will be well worth their while to do so. Every effort is being made to have a fine time. Gov. Dawes and Hon. James Laird will be present. Fine stock, racing, etc., will be principal features. Come and bring your families and have a holiday.

REV. C. B. LENSEF, who has occupied the pulpit in the M. E. Church for two years, departed Monday evening for his new charge at Alexandria, Neb. The people of that town can congratulate themselves as the Reverend gentleman is not only an able man, but spry and thorough Christian. THE CHIEF wishes him success.

THE CHIEF hopes that every republican in Webster county will work and use his influence for harmony in the republican ranks. The ticket nominated last Thursday is a good one, and is deserving of the support of every true and honest republican. There are, of course, kickers, and people who are never satisfied, in all parties, but aside from that we believe the ticket nominated will give general satisfaction to the republicans, and be elected by a good majority.

REPORT of school, district 58, for the month beginning August 31 and ending September 25: Whole number enrolled 233, whole number attending 28, number days absent 21. Those absent during the month, Frank and Sylvester Frisbie; those not tardy, Lottie Parks; those whose department is above 90, Lottie Parks, Homer Starks, John Agnes and Edgar Stork; banner class, Laura Hooper, Lena Wrench, Willie Hefflower and George Wrench, Willis Brown, teach.

MR. WILL N. KING, of the Red Cloud Helmet, was caller at these headquarters Thursday. He looks hearty and prosperous. Nebraska is evidently doing well for the good brother, both physically and financially.—Guide Rock Signal.

Dear Signal, just at the present writing the climate of Nebraska is a little too torrid physically and financially companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

Dear Signal, just at the present writing the climate of Nebraska is a little too torrid physically and financially companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

Dear Signal, just at the present writing the climate of Nebraska is a little too torrid physically and financially companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

Dear Signal, just at the present writing the climate of Nebraska is a little too torrid physically and financially companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

Dear Signal, just at the present writing the climate of Nebraska is a little too torrid physically and financially companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

Dear Signal, just at the present writing the climate of Nebraska is a little too torrid physically and financially companies in Chicago. Messrs. Marchant & Fulton and Mizer are to be congratulated on giving the people a good haul.

DR. L. D. DENNEY,

Waylaid and Brutally Assaulted by W. N. King, Editor of the Red Cloud Helmet.

A Cowardly Act.

Some four months ago the announcement made in this city by various individuals that Red Cloud was to have a Simons pure democratic newspaper, and that one Will N. King, of Popa, O., would be its editor. There was nothing peculiarly wrong about the announcement, but later on the great sheet appeared, and from its very inception it scored our people right and left, according to the Ohio idea of journalism, using all sorts of insinuations that bore the ear marks of numerous malevolence, who seemed to have grown to pick and still the people fairly supported the paper, hoping that in the end the editor would come down to decent journalism. However, it seemed impossible for his friends to sit down on him, and as a last resort was set out and taken back by this so-called editor, he would again bob up with some other boomerang that would set the people cursing him. His idea of what people wanted in this country was so far ahead of all the wants of this country that our enterprising people were unable to grasp his wonderful ideas, hence his efforts to civilize the people were not fully appreciated. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much that never existed, and was always ready, apparently, to become the tool of others when it suited his purpose. He carried his abuse of the people so far that he disgusted his party friends, and many of his party were soiled and disgraced. The people were not to blame for his "cussedness." He, perhaps, was made to believe much