THE HOMESTEAD KITCHEN.

How bright and warm a piace it was, That quaint dear k tchen old. Where blazing logs defied the frost-The breath of winter cold.

The tall clock from its corner dim The nightly silence broke, In tolling off the pass og bours With now and measured stroke.

The apples, quartered and festooned, On strings were have ng high, And cars of golden corn were hung Around the fire to dry.

The faithful watch-dog, Rover, lay constructional upon the itoor; And now and then a noise was heard That sounded I ke a suore.

And pussy, with her well-kept coat fif spotted white and gray, Furred softly, while she sat near by To watch her k ttens play.

Twas there the busy mother made Her dougnouts, plos and cake; "Twas there she put the bread to rise, And watched it frown and bake.

"Twas there the spinning wheel was heard From early mora till night; i or there dear grandma spun and reeled The fleery woolso white.

A pretty picture grandminmade, With snow white hair and cap. When wears with her work, at times Her hands tay in her lap.

Ehe dreamed, no doubt, of by-gone days, When lite was new and eweet; Sile doubtiess beard the patter, too, Of many little ref.

And now, as then, the children came To her with griefs and joins; And now, as then, she knowd and rocked The baby girl- and boys.

The sumbcams played upon the wall And danced upon the floor, And lay in threads of golden light From cracks around the door.

No longer swing those hinges now. No merry children pare. No buzz of spinning which is heard Throughout the Lyolong day

For restless time has closed the door-Has looked and harred at fast-And only to the manners comes-These vacuus of the past-
