Scotch Fishermen's Houses.

The houses as I can testify from a recent inspection, are substantial and commodious, and for the most part have been built at a very cheap rate. There is nothing flashy or ill-favored about them. The smallest, with two good apartments, and outside conveniences, cost a little more than $100. Some that have been more recently constructed have cost more than $200. But these are fine houses, with a commanding view, and contain not only accommodations for a native family, but likewise apartments to be let to summer visitors. Fishermen and fishermen's families, from the nature of their occupation, are not usually remarkable for neat houses or tidy habits, and those of Cookville have not yet got rid of all the old ways. Outside some cottages there is decidedly room for improvement; inside, the houses are usually well kept and comfortable. In visiting a few, I came on one where an invalid girl of 20 had been confined to bed for three years and a half. The bed room in the house had been given up to her; it was airy and well lighted, neatly papered, and thoroughly clean. The fisherman's daughter lay on the bed, bright and happy in spite of her long trial, owing much, no doubt, to a good mother and an affectionate family, but much more to the medicine which divine grace poured down on her, and that medicine, "though secreted, yet rejoicing," was the construction of comfortable dwellings on land is not the only department of social reform in which the human laborer has recently been benefited. Their dwellings on the sea have been equally improved. During the last twenty or twenty-five years they have become possessed of a large number of one hundred decked vessels, worth, perhaps, with their furnishings, $200 each, in which they are enabled to go to the deep-sea fishing, in point of fact, they do their work on a system of rotation, now fishing at home, by-and-by of the coast of Iceland, then according to the herring fishing at the Wick of Peterhead, or perhaps the fishing of Looe. It is a pleasure to think that they are, for the most part, very exemplary in their behavior in these expeditions. Many of them are not only decent, but try to be good by others, they hold their peace meetings together, and try to bring in the careless. Most of them are Presbyterians, a few Methodists, and a few Plymouth Brethren. Being so much from home, the religious influences they come under are somewhat varied, and some of them get a preference for a more domestic style of service than that which is natural in Scotland.

Another work in which they have made great exertions is the construction of a harbor. Port Seaton was destroyed by a storm early in the century, and the harbor constructed more recently by Col. Cadell was quite too small for the Col. Cadell and increasing business of the place. So, again under the guidance of Mr. Ovens, and with the help of loans, they have built a spacious harbor, at a cost of more than $20,000. This cannot fail to react on the prosperity of the place in other respects, so that what seemed thirty years ago a decayed and struggling little village bids fair now to become an increasing and prosperous town.—Prof. Rankin, in the Quiver for February.

Made Use of His Opportunity.

"Now, Shaker, since you've said a dealer in cheap clothing to his eldest born, 'I must right away by Buffalo go, and I leave the store and the business in your hands. Don't you a fine chance for you, time well."
"I am promised to a customer to make a good use of the chance."
"And, Shaker, you've said, 'I was away you might do a good stroke of business—hey? Gold today is coming on, and you must work up all the goods in the store. Don't start a big bankrupt sale, and make believe you sell cheap goods for your own sake, and don't let the old man run away to show his creditors, and show creditors at all in and want to get their goods away from—hey?"
When the old man returned from Buffalo he was surprised to find the store packed up and was yet more surprised when he found that his eldest son had sold off everything and cleared out with the entire assets of the establishment.
"How did you ever learn to be so dishonest," said the old man, "is now as you I can't make a cent."
—Dexter's Traveller's Magazine.

"Killy-manjaho," that is the way in which the sole monarch of African mountains, remote, inaccessible, silent, and low, would have his name pronounced. It signifies the mountain of the cold-making demon, and is applied to the loftiest of the range of extinct volcanoes which form an irregular chain along eastern Africa from Abyssinia to Natal. It lies inland about 200 miles from the seacoast, and is inhabited to a height of from 5,000 to 7,000 feet above the sea-level. Above the inhabited region the lofty peaks of the snow-covered mountain ascend to a height of 15,880 and 16,150 feet. Vegetation climbs up to an altitude of 15,000 feet. Mr. H. H. Johnston managed to climb 1,415 feet higher, and then he stopped. Killy-manjaho is still virgin to the foot of the explorer.
