THE SAMOAN DISASTER.

Arrival of the Alameda Bringing Details of the Fearful Work Done in the Island.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—The steamship Alameda, Commanded by H. Morse, arrived here yesterday morning having sailed from Sydney March 29. She stopped at Tutuila, an island of the Samoan group, on March 29, where she found the American schooner. Her crew, including the American sailors and crew of the schooner, were wrecked at Apia. Commander Morse, upon learning of the disaster to the American ships, at once sailed for Apia. On the way he met the mail cutter and received the German mail at Apia.

The Alameda took mail at Apia, and the Germans, who had been on the ship, wounded sixteen; Lieutenant Ripley and twenty-nine seamen are to come upon the Honolulu steamer.

The Alameda brought from the man-of-war, a naval cadet, R. T. Stocker, and a young American sailor, W. H. White, and also from the schooner, E. W. White, G. W. L. Gan and J. A. Stafford and J. A. L. Jones, of the Alameda.

The Alameda also brought the following accounts of the disaster from the Western Associated Press correspondent at Apia, Samoa:

The little group of Samoan or Navigator Islands, which a few months ago attracted the attention of the world by a fierce civil war between two native factions, has become a scene of serious complications between the great powers of the United States and Germany. The island is now a more appalling than all of the wars which have ever been waged.

In attempting to effect a solution of the Samoan difficulty, and to protect their respective interests in the island, the United States and Germany have nearly lost their lives and $2,000,000 worth of property.

The most violent and destructive hurricane ever known in the South Pacific Ocean passed over the island of Samoa on the 11th and 12th of the present month, and it is estimated that a fleet of six warships and ten vessels were ground to atoms on the coral reefs in the harbor or thrown on the beach in front of the city of Apia. The storm did more damage to the American and German fleets than ever upon the reefs or the harbor in any previous year.

The United States frigate Trenton, flagship of the Pacific squadron, which arrived here from Panama March 11, has within a stone's throw of the shore, been wrecked on the reef. The great hull of the vessel is now lying on its side in the harbor a few weeks ago rests on the bottom, fast going to pieces.

The American steamer Valparaiso, which arrived here from San Francisco February 23, was buried out of sight between the Trenton and the shore. Her shattered forecast and stack rose from the water, marking the spot where the vessel was wrecked. The sea was a rolling sea before the arrival of the water which swept four officers and thirty-nine men from her decks and masts.

The commander, Captain C. M. Henshaw, and the crew of the vessel, which was wrecked on the reef, were rescued by the other officers and crew of the American ships. The commandant of the schooner, Frank Smith, of the schooner and the crew, were also rescued.

The United States steamer Niagara lay for several days alongside the Valparaiso with her bow high on the beach and within five feet of the water. The ship was so badly damaged, was hauled off a few days after the storm and is the only war ship left at the harbor. Several of the officers and crew are still missing. The ship is now lying on the reef, and she is not likely to be raised.

The American merchant crew were swept ashore about the same point.

It was on the little German gunboat Eber that the greatest loss of life occurred. The Eber had a complement of six officers and seventy-four men. She was wrecked on the reef during the storm. When the vessel struck the reef she sank completely out of sight and a minute later there was not a vestige of her to be seen. All on board were either killed or wounded. Lieutenant Froelich and six sailors. The other five officers and sixty-six men were either instantly killed when the vessel crashed to pieces, or were killed by the rolling waves of water that broke upon the reef. A small part of the Eber's crew was afterward washed ashore near an American vessel. This was a most remarkable escape, as the vessel was not seen after she had been wrecked.

The only other man-of-war in the harbor was the British corvette Calliope, which arrived here in February and is now lying at anchor at the same place with the Eber. Her machinery was very powerful and she was capable of steaming at the rate of sixteen knots. She was also wrecked on the reef and her crew were swept ashore.

The beach is strewn with the wreckage from one end of the town to the other. Over 800 American and German sailors are quartered in Apia, and the British sailors are quartered in the greatest confusion at Papeete. A large number of men on the Valparaiso and several on other vessels were badly injured by falling from the rigging and being thrown about deck by the terrible sea. It is necessary to provide a temporary hospital for their accommodations.

Persons on shore were powerless to render assistance to the ships. Hundreds ran to the water's edge and stood in the binding storm watching the great vessels pitch about in the waves. The sea broke against the rocks, and the air was filled with the sound of the surf, carrying with it great quantities of wreckage.

The sailors on shore were surprised and amazed to find that the sea was so high. The air was filled with the sound of the surf, carrying with it great quantities of wreckage.

The native warriors had long ago been warned that the state of war existing between the two nations had broken down. The German sailors were treated alike, no thought was given to the state of war existing between the two nations. The British sailors were treated alike, no thought was given to the state of war existing between the two nations.

The storm raved furiously for nearly two days and when the wind finally abated the scene of destruction was awful.

—Monkeys have an aversion to cruelty. In Honolulu, where three varieties of sacred monkeys enjoy the freedom of every town, these four-handed pensioners often assist the police in enforcing the laws by charging on a man who has been seen carrying a monkey.

At Papeete, a man who was carrying a monkey on his back, was seen carrying a monkey on his back, and for greater security, deposit them on the next roof, or suppress rawly to him.

The stout Ithaca balloon, for instance, being physically well as well as morally qualified to do any aggressive or defensive work of the Government.

On the platform of a public warehouse the British residents of the Agra, a few years ago, witnessed a scene which put that character to rest. It was a strange sight. A little street Arab had a small basket in the shade of a stack of country produce, and had just dropped asleep when the proprietor of the Planters Hotel strode up with a pet leopard that had learned to accompany him in all of his wanderings. The monkey had taken post on the opposite end of the shed, and like the leopards, seemed to enjoy a comfortable abode, but at the sight of the speckled intruder the whole gang charged like a squad of opium and for a moment the monkey was almost smothered by the tiger's nose. The leopard with hissing snarls, and evidently resolved to defend the superior, he had no choice but to leap on the monkey's back.

ABANDONED AT SEA.

And the Valparaiso Line Steamer Reported Abandoned and Sinking at Sea Seven Hundred Miles from Port.

NEW YORK, April 13.—A dispatch from Queenstown says: The Danian steamer City of Chester reports that on April 13, the steamer Danmark was abandoned at sea about 700 miles from port. The Danmark was bound for the Thingvallina, Great West Indies.

The Danmark had on board when she left Christiania for New York March 29, 500 passengers, presumably all immigrants. The crew numbered thirty men.

The office of the agents of the steamer has been thronged with people anxiously inquiring for further news of the vessel.

Mr. Ely's of the firm does not concede the correctness of the report. He has called his London and Copenhagen agents.

The Danmark was formerly the freight steamer Jan Revedel of the White Cross Line. This was the vessel's first trip from the other side under her new name.

The New York and London Thingvallina line says: "The Danmark had been completely overhauled and it was thought by all that she was the best of her kind. There were on board at least 700 people. Of these 500 were passengers. There must have been at least 200 in the crew, and the number may have reached 300 or 400. There are therefore to be accounted for the lives of from 200 to 300 people."

"We have taken steps to send our first steamer to the spot. At 10:30 we sent off two cables. One was to the captain in London asking for further particulars, and also for the name of the ship that she sighted the Danmark in such a condition. The second of the two cables was to the same office in Copenhagen also asking for particulars of the vessel. The name of the 450 people who sailed in the Danmark."

"The position in which the Danmark is said to have been sighted is one in which she might very easily have been lost at sea. The water is very shallow and it is not from Christiansen that I do not think it at all improbable that some fearful calamity has befallen her, but we do not believe that she has been abandoned."

Further particulars of the sighting of the abandoned steamship Danmark by the Italian liner City of Chester, which was sighted after the Danmark was reported abandoned, are given below.

The City of Chester, which was sighted by the Danmark, was on a level with the sea. Her bow was far out of the water in the air. There was no visible sign of the wreck. The wreck was floating about. The boats were all gone from their davits and no indication of haste and panic was noticeable. After lying to near the wreck for some time the City of Chester proceeded.
