The crowds that lined the streets and filled windows and house-tops were unprecedented even for New York. The march was simply an ovation along the entire route.

The President's Address. New York, May 1.—The Metropolitan Opera House was the scene of the second chief event of the centennial celebration yesterday and three of the greatest banquets possibly ever held within the recollection of man. After speeches by ex-President Cleveland and Chief Justice Fuller, President Harrison spoke to "The United States of America" as follows:

Mr. President and Fellow Citizens: I should be unjust to myself, and what is more serious, I should be unjust to you, if I did not at the first and last opportunity express to you my deep sense of the obligation and thankfulness which I feel for the many personal and official courtesies which have been extended to me since I came to take part in this celebration. [Applause.] The official representatives of the State of New York and of this great city have invited me to be with you, and I have received the most cordial expressions of good will. I would not, however, have you understand that these loud acclamations have been in any sense appreciated as personal tributes to myself. I have realized that there was in this occasion and in all these interesting incidents which have made it so profoundly impressive to my mind, and which have been greater than any living man. [Applause.] I have realized that that tribute of cordial interest which you have manifested was rendered to that great office which by the favor of a greater people I now exercise to me. [Applause.]

The occasion and all of its incidents will be memorable, not only in the history of your city,

THE CLOSING SCENES.

The Centennial Celebration Closed With a Grand Civic Parade—Thousands of Admirers. New York, May 2.—The crowd at Union Square yesterday was if any thing greater than that of the day before. Inspector Steers and his 300 policemen had it all could do to keep the immense throng in order. The stands every window facing the square, the roofs of the surrounding buildings and the sidewalks were packed with humanity. The streets from the Fourth avenue side of the square from Fourteenth to Seventeenth streets were free to women and children. Long before it was time for the parade to start they were crowded. Many of the people came as early as three or four o'clock in order to secure seats. At nine o'clock it was impossible to get on one part of the square to another and when once one got into the crowd there he had to stay.

President Harrison in his barouche, accompanied by his staff, was escorted by a squad of mounted police, accompanied by Vice-President Morton, Colonel Cruger and Lieutenant Jordon, U. S. A., drove up to the Madison square reviewing stand at 10:30. Ex-Presidents Hayes and Cleveland, Secretaries Foster, Tracy, Windom and Bask, General Sherman and Russell B. Harrison had previously arrived. Others on the stand were General-Bureau of Maine, and staff, Brigadier-General H. M. Sprague, Brigadier-General John Harper, Fred Douglas, who received a cheer as he entered the stand, and Senator Gibson, of Maryland.

The first tableau, "The Declaration of Independence" was intended to represent the reading of the Declaration of Independence by John Nixon in the State House, which was surrounded by an escort of 100 members of the Society of Veterans of the Regular Army and Navy. The next tableau represented "Washington and his Generals mounted." Washington, as Commander-in-Chief, occupies the center of the line, with Major-General Ward Putnam, Philip Schuyler and Charles Lee on either side. Closely following are the nine Brigadier-Generals, the number appointed by the Continental Congress at Philadelphia in 1775; also Marquis De Lafayette, Baron Steuben, Inspector-General Count Rochambeau and others. This tableau is guarded as a special escort by Wier battalion, school No. 10, Brooklyn, Major F. H. Nichols commanding.

Following this tableau came the float representing Washington Crossing the Delaware, with a school of several hundred cadets in uniform. Then came a school of children escorting a tableau of "Washington at Valley Forge, Winter of 1777 and 1778." It represents the winter quarters at Valley Forge and the suffering of the army, and the heroic endurance of the men and the wounded soldiers.

The Exempt Firemen's Association to the number of 200, came next and after them the Tammany Hall boys under the leadership of General John Collins. Several temperance societies and lodges of Knights of Pythias preceded the float, "The Resignation of the Commission," and the Younger cadet corps escorted "The First Inauguration." Between the Washington continentals and 1,000 Sons of Veterans, was the float of the Commonwealth of Virginia, representing a ship of the sixteenth century, with adventurers in Elizabethan costumes, crowding the poop-deck descending the land. Then followed a series of tableaux representing various States as follows:
