The Soldier's Home.

On arriving at Grand Island to attend the W. R. C. Convention we found friends at once, and one of them invited us to take a ride with her, and visit the soldiers home. We were glad to do so and our friend's ponies took us there in quick time. It is situated nearly two miles from the city and on higher ground, and from the upper windows one can see all over the city. They had not expected company at the home that forenoon, so we saw them just as they are everyday. On our entrance we were taken to the very pleasant reception room which is beautifully furnished. We met Commander Henry there and after a very pleasant talk he invited us to stay to dinner and then he would show us everything about the house. We very gratefully accepted the invitation and saw the soldiers at their dinner in their very pleasant dining room. Everything was neat, and the dinner was bountiful and as our chum expressed it, "As good as a company dinner." We were shown through the main building by Mrs. Hurford the matron, the right woman in the right place. The rooms are all spacious and finely furnished. The bedrooms with comfortable looking beds, and all the furniture necessary, and not crowded at all in some large rooms are only two single beds. Then there are bath rooms with hot and cold water at their command. The reading room took my special attention. It is large and pleasant, and comfortably furnished with easy chairs and small tables, a Cottage organ and other musical instruments, and a bookcase filled with books and periodicals. One of the veterans told me they had all the reading matter they wanted. All the inmates seem to be perfectly comfortable and without a fear for their future in this life, and they must be happy. If I were left to the cold charities of the world, I would be glad to spend the remainder of my life in such a pleasant place, for that is not charity, it is the reward that the grateful people of Nebraska have prepared for the brave defenders of this country, who can no longer care for themselves. I cannot tell you all the comforts of the place, as they have to be seen to be appreciated. When we had finished the inside a veteran took us in charge to show us what was outside. He was the first one who entered the home and also had the honor of being the oldest one there, until within the last few months he has been superseded by another one. It does not please him but we comforted him with the thought that no one could get the first honor from him. The hospital has been built since Commander Henry has been there and is a fine building with all the comforts and conveniences for the sick, and they have the best of nurses and medical attendance. The cottages are a great feature of the institution. The veteran who is disabled can go there and take his family with him, and live in one of the cottages, and everything that is necessary is furnished for them, and all they have to do is to prepare it for use. Their children can be supported all they are 15 years of age, then, they are otherwise provided for. Nebraska was the first to organize an institution of this kind, which will care equally for the veteran and his wife. The commander was anxious we should see the cows. When he went there they had none and bought all their milk, but now they have nine which furnish them nearly enough, but he thinks they must have a few more, so they can have plenty of milk. The old Scotch veteran who attended us, was more concerned about the fame of his chickens, and when he came to the henhouse he called our attention to them. There are great numbers of them of different kinds but a great majority are of the Plymouth Rock variety and are very fine. They furnish all the eggs and chicken broths that are needed. All of the soldiers who are able want to do some work, and last season they raised corn and potatoes and cut their own hay, and they told us that if they had more of the land under cultivation, and they had some more horses they would be nearly self supporting. Much gratitude is due Capt. Henry for the efficient manner in which he manages the home so that our war worn veterans can spend their days in peace and quietness.

THE CONVENTION.

The ladies of Grand Island entertained the delegates of the W. R. C.

right royally, serving them a bountiful dinner every day in their banqueting rooms under the hall, besides giving them a welcome to their homes. The W. R. C. hall was beautifully decorated, and everything was done which could aid to our comfort or pleasure. Even the street cars were free to us. We are glad that the soldiers reunion is located there for the next five years. But the best of all was, our honored National President, Mrs. Annie Wittmeyer was present at the convention. Also our Past National President, Mrs. Emma S. Hampton. Mrs. Wittmeyer is one of our grand army nurses, who was at the front nearly all the time during the war, and she told us many of her experiences on the field of battle, when she talked to us after the public installation of the G. A. R. and W. R. C. department officers. The weather turned the cold shoulder to us, while we were there, but the people's hearts were warm enough to make it all up, and we intend to go there again when it is warmer.
