TEACHING HOUSEKEEPING. A New Profession to Brighten the Liv. of Young Couples.

The woes of young housekeepers have been described so often that it is re markable that a practical teacher of housekeeping has only just now arisen. One of the army of women who had to do something for her own and family's support, and whose limitations were defined narrowly, as she thought, with in the qualifications of a systematic and skillful housekeeper, had the bright idea to utilize her one accomplishment. She spends a fortnight or a month in the newly-founded household superintending the servants, adjusting the details, and in fact getting the domestic machine in running order and teaching the young housekeeper just what touch to put upon the cogs and wheels in or der to keep it so. It is a marvel that sobody has thought of it before. Now that a start has been made, how-
