PROF. WILLIAM MCADAM made a trip up the Illinois river in search of relics for the world's fair geological exhibit. He reports having made a valuable find. It is a prehistoric stone ruin on the top of the highest hill in DeWitt county. The hill is 327 feet high. The ruins are of stone slabs. The slabs were removed and disclosed a number of skeletons, all of which were minus the skull. As the skull is the last part of the human body to decay it is evident that the persons whom these relics bear witness of were beheaded. Below was a floor of slabs, which covered a vault. In this was the skeleton of a man of large stature, and about were relics of copper, pearl and stone.

PARAGUAY has 430,000 people in her 91,970 square miles of territory. Large numbers of uncivilized Indians are not counted. The country is rich in vegetation, but only 160,000 acres are under cultivation. Among the notable products are algoroba and quebracho for tanning, and algorabella, indigo and annatto for dyeing. There is an abundance of resins, copal, gum elastic, drug plants, balsams. Besides cotton, Paraguay produces textile and fibrous plants like ramie, jute and palm. The foreign trade is about $5,000,000 a year, but the United States gets very little of it. The principal exports are tobacco, hides, lumber and oranges. Paraguay has no sea port. Her products go out by the Paraguay and Paraná rivers.

WORKS now under construction will, within the next two years, add over 2,500,000 acres to the California land reclaimed by irrigation. Bankers and capitalists in that state are beginning to be impressed with this rapid development of irrigation. In order to have a basis for the consideration of irrigation securities they are engaged in promoting what might be called an irrigation survey of California. They have employed irrigation engineers and irrigation lawyers to make a thorough investigation and report on the physical, engineering, legal and business features of irrigation. These experts are commissioned to report, cold-bloodedly, upon what irrigation accomplishes, upon the possible water supply, upon the cost of works, upon the legal status of water, upon irrigation contracts and rights of way, and upon local sentiment and its tendencies in the various districts. The commission is a broad one. It illustrates the growing importance of all irrigation questions as well as the growing interest of capital in these questions.

WOEFUL WATERS.

Fearful Destruction by a Sudden Flood at Sioux City.

At Least Twenty-five People Reported Drowned by a Sudden Rise in Floyd River—Great Loss of Stock and Other Property.

SIoux CITY, Ia., May 19.—A great flood disaster has overtaken Sioux City. Yesterday morning a great wave came down the Floyd river which flows through the center of the city and which was already swollen bank full.

The wave came a few minutes after 7 o'clock. Warning had been given but a short time before to the inhabitants of the low lands, but only a few of them had been notified. The first intimation was a volume of water spreading over the bank to the depth of three feet and throwing a mist of foam before it. In a few minutes the water had risen above the first floors and several thousand people fled in terror to the higher ground. At least twenty-five people drowned.

The water rose four feet in an hour and a half, and from 9 o'clock continued to rise steadily, but not so rapidly. Probably one-third of the inhabitants of the city live on the low ground which is overflowed. So rapid was the rise of the tide that great numbers were unable to escape and the work of rescue engaged every energy of the people.

The only names of the dead so far ascertained are: Nellie West, child; Mrs. Louise Horner and two children; Frank Henderson, wife and child; two boatmen, unknown; A. P. McCleary; an unknown Scandinavian; Mrs. Peter Rasmtsen and two children; two unknown men near Fourth street, near Fairmont bridge; unknown man at Sioux City & Northern yards.

At 10 o'clock the fire alarm was sounded to call out more workers. All the boats from the boat houses on the Sioux river were brought in and used to save life and property.

The Missouri river is high and when the flood in the Floyd river struck it the water dammed up and rushed over the adjacent low grounds. The stockyards and packing houses are situated at the confluence of the two rivers and they were instantly inundated. About 2,000 head of live stock were drowned. Many hundreds of dead stock have also been floating down the Floyd river.

The round houses of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha are damaged to the extent of $40,000. That road, the Illinois Central and Sioux City & Northern enter the city by the Floyd valley and all are stopped. Not a train left Sioux City yesterday.

It is estimated that 8,000 people have been driven from their homes. All business is suspended.

The water is slowly receding. A citizens' meeting at the courthouse organized to provide several thousand people with shelter. The damage to property will reach $1,500,000. The loss of the Sioux City & Northern railroad will exceed $200,000. Miles of cedar block paving have been washed out.

The first warning of the approach of the flood given the stockyards company was a telephone message warning them to prepare for high water and stating that the Seventh street bridge had gone out. The whole available force of the yards, and also bystanders who could be induced to assist, were at once put to work in an endeavor to get all stock out of the yards.

A long train of empties were sent down to the chutes, but before the cars could be loaded and pulled, the rush of water came and put out the fires in the engines, and they were compelled to stay. The attendants and yardmen who had not time to escape were perched on the roofs of cars waiting to be rescued or for the subsidence of the flood.

The rush of water was so great that a number of commission men and their employes could not escape. They took refuge in the third story of the Exchange building, while the water had risen to within an inch of the first floor.

The scene at the yards is almost indescribable. The rush of water came down across the bottoms as the overflow of the river at first flowed out on the east banks. At 10:30 solid blocks of hog pens were seen away with the motion of the wind and waves and in a short time they began moving down stream. The new division started first and almost the whole block started off down street, and the report of the rending and breaking of timbers, sounded almost like the sharp crack of cannon.

At 11 o'clock there was not a sign of a hog yard left. The large corn cribs containing several thousand bushels of corn were also carried away. Scale houses and all buildings were taken with the flood. The cattle yards at the time mentioned above were mostly intact, but the south portion was floating with the evident possibility that it would soon follow the hog pens and sheds.

There will be a great chorus of 1,500 voices in patriotic songs and some soloists of note.

The Second Day's Session. KANSAS CITY, Kan., May 19.—The attendance of the second day of the Kansas Pharmaceutical association was much larger than that of yesterday. This morning's session was devoted largely to the discussion of the sale of patent medicines, but no action was taken in the matter, it being referred to the committee on publication. The place for holding the next convention will probably be decided upon this afternoon. The principal part of the morning session was the election of officers.
