THE ELECTION.

Mr. Blaine's Utterance in the North American Review.

Mr. Cleveland Scored For His Letter-President Harrison Commended -But Little Difference Outside of Two Points.

New York, Oct. 24.-Mr. Blaine's long promised utterance of the presidential election of 1892 appears in the November number of the North American Review, which is to be published to-day. It occupies thirteen pages in the Review. Mr. Blaine notes the luck of excitement attending the presidential election contrasting it with the turmoil of interest that characterized the campaign of the elder Harrison. This change of public interest in such contests, he suggests, may be accounted for by the growth in population, and the consequent absorption is vast commercial operations, and is may be possible indicates a subsidence in the future of extreme partisanship.

Mr. Blaine gives special attention to the letters of the presidential candidates. Of President Harrison's letter he says among other things: That perhaps none of his predecessors has made so exhaustive and more clear presentation of the questions involved. Mr. Cleveland's letter is subjected to scorching criticism. Mr. Blaine finds that in a greater measure than Mr. Harrison's it departs from the platform of his party; in fact that "Mr. Cleveland has made the platform upon which he is now before the people," and "that Mr. Cleveland's departure from the position of his party's platform, the platform of free trade, confirms the impression which has been general, that a large proportion of the democra tic party believes in protection in some form.

Mr. Blaine makes caustic comment upon Mr. Cleveland's utterance on the currency and the state banks. He upholds the republican policy of granting liberal pensions to the veterans of the war. On this point he says: "The amount we contribute toward pensions is larger than the amount paid by any of the European nations for a standing army. Surely the binding up of the wounds of the past war is more merciful and honorable work than is preparing the country for a new one.

The most remarkable thing in the presidential canvase of 1893 Mr. Blaine regards as "the manner in which in some sections of the country all ether issues have been put out of sight and the force bill alone brought into prominence." He compliments Mr. Dans, of the New York Sun, the author of this policy, upon his zeal and ability in achieving this result. The representations made as to the purpose and the effect of the force bill, however, he de-elares to be inconsistent with the spirit of President Harrison's letter.

Mr. Blaine is full and explicit in his treatment of the subject of reciprocity, elaiming that a material increase has been caused in the Uniced States trade by reciprocal treaties with the islands and countries of America and particu-larly by the treaties made with the European countries. Mr. Blaine quoted interesting figures in relation to the increase of trade with the Leeward and dicts in relation to Cuba that "we shall conquer by commerce far better than by force of armies, and cordially establish such mutual interests between Cuba and this country that commercially the two countries will be one,"

Mr. Blaine, dealing with the claim of the democratic party to be the Jeffer-sonian party, says: "It would surprise Jefferson if he could once more appear in the flesh to learn that he is held as indorser of all the principles and measures advocated by the democratic party to-day. It is perhaps not worth while to enter into any claborate argument on the subject, but the democracy owes no little of its success to the persistence with which its adherents have made their disciples believe this pretension true through all the mutations of their party. It was equally true, it must be sup-posed, when Mr. Buchanan, a confirmed federalist, was the president elect of the democracy, though it is well known that the object of Mr. Jefferson's most intense dislike was the federal party. In vain it is pointed out that the posi-tion of Jefferson on any subject was directly the reverse of the democratic position. He is duly reacted at the next convention and a new eath of allegi-ance is taken to his principles. In 1861, after a severe contest, Jefferson came to the presidency as the founder and to the presidency as the founder and head of the republican party.

"The prefix democratic was some-times, though seldom, used. The ten-acity which Jefferson held to the protective principle was only proportioned to the necessities of the country. Hi action in 1807, when he declined to recommend the repeal or alteration of the revenue law, after a surplus of $14,000, coo had been accumulated, puts him in the sharpest contrast to Mr. Cleveland, who, in his term of office, treated the surplus accumulated as the acme of all

In conclusion Mr. Blaine calls attention to the essential agreement of the two parties on the great majority of the issues. "It is interesting and suggestive," he says, "to look over the platform of the two parties, and see how much alike they are."

LODGING HOUSE LIFE.

amounties of the Life and Some Pungent

Many of the large old-fashioned houses in Washington are owned by persons whose incomes are in inverso ratio to the size of their dwellings, therefore they take a few boarders or else rent rooms. In one of these houses a certain journalist has the back room just across the broad hall from the back parlor. One Friday night recently he was out later than usual, so overslept himself the next morning and did not leave the house until about 11 o'clock. When he opened the front door he saw a hearse and several cartiages standing in front of the house and, as he was naturally a little curious to know who was bereaved, he said to a hackman who was leaning against the fence:

"Who is dead? Where is the funeral?" He says you might have knocked him down with a feather when the man replied, looking at him with surprise:

"In your house, sir!" Dr. T- was at that moment reading the burial service in the front parlor. The deceased, a lady, was only a a visitor in the city and her friends had, at first, intended to take her to her bome in W-for interment; therefore, no grape was hung on the door and no an souncement of her death was inserted in the paper. They afterward decided to lay ber in a vault in one of the Washington cemeteries, but, as her friends wer few, no one but the half dozen relatives were at the funeral. Hence there was no confusion and no stir in the hall to attract attention when the journalist eft his room.

Most of the people who room in this house are middle aged, quiet people; the only young man, Mr. L.—, has the hall room up one flight. Last week he went to his landlady's sitting room in the back building (or L) and tapped at the door.

'Come in." said some one. So he entered, and there sat a stranger who looked comfortable and very much at home, in smoking jacket, cap and slippers. Mr. L-asked if his landlady were there.

"No," said the stranger, "she is not."
"I'm Mr. I ___," said the young man.

To Make Mint Sauce.

The rules for mint sauce vary. Some cooks use a certain percentage of stock but this seems to us to be a mistake. The time-honored English rule is the best. This calls for vinegar, sugar and mint alone. Select only fresh and tender mint for this sauce. Strip the leaves from the stems, wash them and drain them in a sieve, and mince them fine with a sharp cook's knife. Gather having a membership of over 14,000 and young people's societies having a membership of nearly 4,000.

A CHECK for $270 was presented at the together again and continue the choping until the leaves are a fine mince. p'ng until the leaves are a fine mince. French cooks always chop up their herbs in this way and even their meats, the chopping knives in our American kitchens being a rarity with them. There should be four heaping table-spoonfuls of mint chopped. Pour over the mint a half cupful of good vinegar boiling hot, Add three tablespoonfuls of sugar and set the sauce away where it will become ice cold. When mint disagrees with individuals this sauce may be strained after it has stood four hours; but it is ordinarily served with the mint in it.—N. Y. Tribune.
