Some fellow on Saturday attempted to ride an untamed broncho. The animal started off a 2-40 rate and fell with its rider at the street car track. When the broncho got up the man's feet stuck in the stirrup, and it was nothing but providential interference that saved the young man from being dragged to death. As it was the horse was stopped by another in front of it.

PINNED DOWN BY THE ENGINE.

An Engineer and Fireman Meet Death at McCook.

McCook, Neb., Dec. 27—An awful railroad accident occurred at Perry Station, about six miles west of McCook, at five o'clock this evening, which resulted in the instant death of Engineer Andrew Cummins and Fireman Baxter W. Goodrich, both of whom are recent arrivals from Red Cloud, where they were formerly in the employ of the B. & M. It seems that the engineer and fireman, with engine 135, were pulling the gravel train back to the gravel pit at Wau-netta and was backing up, there being no turn table at Wau-netta At Perry Station they encountered and ran over some horses, the animals going under the engine, which was thrown into the ditch, the tender on one side, the locomotive proper on the other side of the track. Both of the engine men were pinioned under the locomotive and were crushed to death.

Word was brought here by a horse man and the wrecker and crew quickly repaired to the scene. The work of releasing the dead men was prosecuted with vigor, the crushed and disfigured bodies being brought back to McCook at eight o'clock. Both of the unfortunate men have families living at Red Cloud, Mrs. Cummins having one child. The dead fireman's family consists of a wife and two children.

This is one of the saddest accidents that ever occurred on the western division and it has cast a shadow of gloom over this community.

The above item was taken from the Lincoln Journal, and relates to two of our well known and esteemed railroad boys who met their death while in the pursuit of duty. Railroad has its terrors and dangers, yet little does the passenger think of those things when gliding over the iron rails, drawn by the ponderous locomotive, whose guiding hand is that of the brave engineer and his trusty fireman. Day in and day out they remain at their posts, facing countless dangers, yet ever ready and willing to perform their duties no matter how severe. This was the case with Andrew Cummins and his fireman, B. W. Goodrich.

They were at their posts of duty when the dread messenger came and called them to a higher life. As soon as possible after the accident their families, in this city were made acquainted with the sad news and left Tuesday evening for McCook. On Wednesday evening the bodies were brought to Red Cloud, and were met at the depot by the A. O. U. W. and Masonic lodges, and escorted to their late residences. On Monday morning at eleven o'clock the funeral of Mr. Baxter Goodrich took place at the Congregational church under the management of Red Cloud lodge No. 60, A. O. U. W. of which he was an honored member. After the services the body was taken to Salem, Kansas, for interment, a large number of the A. O. U. W. boys and friends following and paying the last tribute at the grave. The funeral of Andrew Cummins took place this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the Christian church and was taken care of by Charity large A. F. & A. M., of this city of which Mr. Cummins was an esteemed member. Death is sad at all times, but coming to their homes as it did so unexpected it is doubly severe, and the trying ordeal is one that will cause those left behind many tears of anguish and much suffering that none can portray that have not passed through the affliction. In their hour of sorrow the bereaved families and their friends have the heartfelt sympathy of every household in the city.

Red Cloud Camp No. 608, Modern Woodmen elected the following officers on Wednesday evening:
