Editorial Correspondence.

FLINT, Mich., Nov. 4.

For a number of days while visiting in the east, I devoted my attention to the state of Michigan, my headquarters being in the pretty little town of Flint, a city of more than 12,000 inhabitants, with its paved streets, and other modern improvements, which go a long way towards making life pleasant. It was here that I managed to eat three square meals per day with my Michigan brother-in-law, Dr. B. S. Clark, and for that reason I was better prepared to expand my views on the condition of the farming class, in that section. What looks "the queerest" as the old lady would say, was "those pesky little truck patches, hemmed in with rail fences" none of which looked large enough for a good sized cow yard, that is to a fellow that had lived on the broad acres of Nebraska, where every man owns 160 acres, and thirsts after more. But upon more mature investigation I found that many, if not all of the farmers owned from 60 to 160 acres and were doing well, but that farming was not as easy in the Wolverine state as in Nebraska. Stumps, stumps, stumps, stumps every where, stumps in the fields, stumps on fire, stumps in piles, stumps suspended between heaven and the top of a stump extractor, and me thinks I can see a sign poised high on some old tree, similar to a dentist's sign "stumps pulled without pain," or it gives one a pain to see them pull stumps, or something like that, in fact the stump question is more perplexing than the election question, in Nebraska, for they enter into all problems social and otherwise, and in fact you will find them used in fences for miles and miles, with their diversified spirals pointing like so many crooked digits toward the silvery dome of heaven, from one day's end to the other, until a fellow begins to imagine that he is making stump speeches or has snakes in his boots, or something worse; still with all of the hard work of a Michigan farmer he manages to grow a good crop and eat hearty. Farming however is done on a different scale than in our own fair state, here in Michigan, the farmer raises eight or ten acres of corn, and thinks he has an immense field; then he raises a few potatoes, a few beans, a few acres of wheat and so on, and manages to always have a crop of something, if it is only children; while out in Nebraska the other is the rule, more crops and fewer children, and a man thinks if he has not more than fifty acres of corn that he is not doing much and often has from 100 acres to many times that much. Thus it is between the two states which are so differently situated as far as agricultural pursuits are concerned.

In matter of climate, Michigan does not equal Nebraska, I do not think, as Michigan has a cold damp atmosphere, and very cold winter weather, from sixty to ninety days sleighing, much rain and mud, etc, while our own climate is higher and dryer, more open winters, with good hard roads, and much more healthful, while farming is much easier, but Michigan holds its own by being closer to market, and always having a good demand for her products. All in all, however I prefer to live in Nebraska, where the climate is more salubrious, and not so vigorous, yet there is much beauty and pleasure in the pine clad forests of Michigan and its methods of farming, the beautiful little lakes, handsome cities, and many other pleasures, that are to be found within her borders.

The city of Flint is a city made up principally of retired farmers, and in the main has been built up by them, and hundreds of beautiful residences are to be seen on every hand. The city has two railroads, the Grand Trunk, and Flint and Pere Marquette railways. There are three or four daily papers and several weeklies to aid in keeping the interests of the city before the people. In all it is among one of the most handsome cities in the state.

After two weeks visit in Flint and Otter Lake, I started on my return journey, and as I could not get "first-class passage in a stock car" I took the next best thing, a passenger coach on the Grand Trunk which was a little worse than a palace stock car. Smoky, dingy and decidedly very dirty, and not much like the handsome vestibule trains that are run over our "Burlington route" with all of the modern conveniences. Few railroads can equal the Burlington in equipment, and in going THE CHIEF would always advise its friends to take the B. & M. if they want to go in the best manner possible and on time.

After reaching Chicago I roamed around the city taking in the sights of that modern, as well as wonderful city and at 12:45 took the Burlington flyer for the west pleased to know that I was again heading for the land of sunshine and beauty 365 days in the year, and arrived home on Wednesday following better pleased than ever to know that I reside in Nebraska and on Nebraska soil.

Repeal of the Silver Bill.

With the aid of twenty-three republicans and twenty democrats President Cleveland has succeeded in having the Sherman silver law of 1890 repealed.

Opposed to repeal were eight republicans, twenty-two democrats, and two populists. Without the aid of the republican senators President Cleveland would have been defeated by his own party, for two more democrats voted against repeal than voted for it. This puts an end to the purchase of silver by the government for the present, and it may build up a strong party in favor of the free coinage of silver. President Cleveland staked everything upon the repealing measure and won by the aid of his political opponents. Time will tell whether the republicans acted with good political judgment in raking the chestnuts out of the fire for President Cleveland to crack. Under republican administration the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver every month by the government did not perceptibly effect the credit of currency. The coinage of that silver into round dollars did not amount to one dollar a year for each inhabitant of this country; and it was not until the coinage of silver for India was stopped was there any flurry in the silver market. President Cleveland is owned by Wall Street, and Wall Street demanded the purchase of silver should stop.

When the democratic administration took possession of Washington and later political revolutions had shown that the democrats had not only control of the government but also of both houses of congress, the manufacturers became alarmed that the democratic threat of free trade would be carried out, so they began to close down their mills and workshops gradually till hundreds of thousands of workmen were walking the streets in idleness. Then President Cleveland began to cast about for a reason for all this ruin to the industries of the country, and shutting his eyes to the real cause he began lustily to yell that it was too much silver that was hurting the country, and at once he called congress together to repeal the terrible Sherman law.

The deed is done. The country will now see if the repeal or the silver bill will restore confidence and set the wheels of industry running as they did under President Harrison's administration.

Positive and Negative.

The Race Question is unsettled. But it is settled that Hood's Sarsaparilla leads all remedies.

Dyspepsia is a great foe of the human race. But Hood's Sarsaparilla puts it to flight.

Scrofula is one of the most terrible of diseases. But Hood's Sarsaparilla expels it from the system.

The people of this day, like Job, suffer from boils. But Hood's Sarsaparilla is a sovereign remedy for them.

Catarrh is one of the most disagreeable disorders. But Hood's Sarsaparilla is sure to relieve and cure it.

Rheumatism racks the system like a thumb-screw. But it retreats before the power of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Loss of appetite leads to melancholia. But Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the plainest repast tickle the palate.

Life is short and time is fleeting, but Hood's Sarsaparilla will bless humanity as the ages roll on.

Dislocated His Shoulder!

Friday night last as Wm. DeHart, Sr. was driving along the highway northeast of the city, he met a man in a wagon. The fellow it appears, was rather near sighted and it being quite dark, did not start to pull his horses to one side of the road seen enough, and Mr. De Hart's buggy collided with the hind wheels of the wagon, snapping off the shafts. Mr. De Hart held on to the lines and was drawn over the dash-board and fell to the ground in such a manner as to dislocate his shoulder. Soon after the accident he received the necessary surgical attention and is getting along nicely.—Carthage, Ill., Gazette.
