A few weeks ago the crew of the sealing schooner Oscar had a lively experience off Clayoquot, a little place on Vancouver island. One seal had been caught early in the morning. and at about 10 o'clock the hunter in one of the boats noticed two heads some twenty yards in front of him. The fog partly obscured objects at lar at the Chicago Clothing Store than any distance, and the hunter thought any where else in this country. the heads were those of seal. He shot, and the discharge was followed by a shrick of agony from one of the ani- or paper hanging will save money by mals, which at once made for the calling on F. P. Hadley, Red Cloud Ned. boat. The men then became aware that a large female walrus, wounded and infuriated, was after them. She rose out of the water, and grasping the side of the boat with her powerful tusks, tried to overturn it. There Pitcher's Castoria. was a fight of several minutes, the men endeavoring to beat the walrus with oar blades and paddles. Finally a shot through the head killed her. and she was towed back to the schooner as the great prize of the season. Whales are a common sight off

Whales are a common sight off Cape Flattery, and now and then a few will find their way into Puget Sound. Not long ago a school of ten or twelve appeared in the Tacoma harbor, and amused the people of the city by their gambols in the water. The whale that comes here is not the common Greenland whale, but the California gray whale, or finback. Its length varies from twenty-five to thirty feet. One of the largest fish found in these waters is the sturgeon, which runs up the Columbia and the other rivers of Washington. Mrs. Andrews was fishing for porgies, when she saw near by a six-foot sturgeon stranded upon the sand and making furious attempts to reach deep water. Mrs. Andrews is a small woman, but full of courage, so, seizing a club, she went for the sturgeon and pounded it into insensibility. Then she called her husband, who cut it up into strips and dried its flesh.

An Indian fishing in the Columbia for salmon recently caught a big shark. The Indian had a seine, one end of which was anchored on the shore. As he was towing the outer end around a circle he felt a strong jerk on the net. He promptly pulled Cape Flattery, and now and then a few will find their way into Puget end around a circle he felt a strong jerk on the net. He promptly pulled for the shore, and upon, drawing the net in found that a huge shark was floundering in the meshes. At first the Indian was inclined to let go of the net and cut it and let the monster escape but his spectages in since the first part of the plaint flour prevailed, and he decided to try to bring the fellow to land. Fastening the anchored end even more firmly he proceeded slowly to draw up on the beach the other end. As the shark came into the shallow water it struggled more and more furiously to get out into the deep channel. Several times it looked as if the shark would be the victor in the fight, but the Indian hitched the net ropes around a young tree and kept every inch that he gained. Whenever the shark would become Remarkable Career of an Aged Woman of Chill.

"Perhaps the most remarkable woman in the world lives in Santiago. Chili," said Robert A. Bonham, an American who has spent several years in South America. . She is apparently a well preserved woman of thirty-five, rather good looking, spry as a girl, and is a pronounced coquette. yet it is known positively that she is eighty years of age, and may be much She has a granddaughter who looks old enough to be her mother. This remarkable woman is of Spanish extraction, a native of Peru, and her name is Boeckman, her second husband now dead, being a German.

Middle-aged people aver that she was a grown woman when they were On the 5th Day of March, A. D. children, and that she does not look a day older now than she did then. She is regarded with superstitious awe by the more ignorant of the natives over whom she could undoubtedly exercise great influence were her morals not so notoriously bad. She is passionately fond of dancing. has a musical voice, snapping black eyes, and a beautiful set of teeth. She claims that she owes her wonderful preservation to a charm which as old half-breed Indian doctor exercised over her when she was a child. She says she will neither grow old nor die until the charm is broken. Some of the natives express the belief that she is in a league with the with a young woman not long ago and cut her seriously, but the latter was afraid to enter complaint against her lest she should exercise some baleful influence over her. It is said that she has many admirers, and is soon to be married to a young Chilean of considerable wealth."

Whenever the shark would become quet for a moment the man would pull in a few more feet of the net. At last the shark was where the Indian could wade in and thrust a long knife into its vitals. The fish seemed but very little disturbed by the wounds it received, and the Indian must have stabbed it in fifty different piaces before it began to show signs of yielding. After about two hours of struggling, during which the water for yards around became red with blood, the shark yielded to fate, and was drawn on the beach. When measured it was found to be sixteen feet long, and its weight was 1,500 pounds. A seal and a sturgeon, partly digested, were in the stomach. The Indians from the vicinity eagerly seized upon the teeth, which they use in making necklaces.
