THE TEMPLE OF HATHOR.

One of the Ancient Buildings of Egypt and Very Well Preserved.

We steamed two hours one morning on the Nile and after an early breakfast rode on donkeys about three miles to the famous temple of Hathor, the Egyptian Aphrodite, at Denderah. This temple was built just before the Christian era by one of the Ptolemies, and the porch was added by Tiberius. Though built by Greek and Roman emperors, it is essentially Egyptian in architecture and decoration, and as it was the first of the great temples that we had seen we were very much impressed. It stands on the borders of the desert and the verdant plain, surrounded by the ruins of an old town, the debris of which, together with the blowing sands, rise several feet above its foundations. The temple is very well preserved. Its porch, the latest part, is a noble hall, supported by 24 columns about 8 feet in diameter and 40 feet high, the capitals presenting colossal faces of Hathor on four sides. Every foot of the surface, outside and in, is covered with sculpture, which, though of the period of decadence, is still striking because of the amount of it.

The main temple behind the porch consists of four central chambers and some 20 others, each of which had its use. The faces on nearly all the figures have been mutilated by iconoclastic Mohammedans or Christians. On the exterior of the wall in the rear, among other figures are Cleopatra and her son Caesarion, whose father was Julius Caesar. This representation of the famous Egyptian queen, though contemporaneous, scarcely justifies the tradition of her beauty. Near by is a small temple of Isis, and another which seems to have had some connection with the temple of Hathor. The town of Tentyris stood here. The Tentyrites hated the crocodiles which the people of neighboring Ombos worshiped, and a religious war of great fury was carried on between the two places. If there must be religious wars, they may as well be over crocodiles as over dogmas which nobody knows the truth of. The ruins of Tentyris are mainly of brick, baked and unbaked. The temples are of limestone. Some of the stones forming the roof are 24 feet long and 6 feet wide. The whole construction is massive. Inside are traces of color which must have greatly added to the beauty. At Denderah we are not far from the Libyan hills, but our course takes us away from them toward the Arabian side as we came to Luxor.—Boston Herald.
