THE TEACHER AS A CHARACTER BUILDER.

Character, that most important and best part of our being, the only part which is valuable in this life and which can be taken to the life beyond, is not a gift of nature. It must be built. Then who are the builders? All are architects of fate, working in these walls of time," but in the building of character, the teacher has been in past ages and is in the present age the most important factor. Holland said, "A teacher should be the strongest and most angelic man that breathes," and it is true, for no other person has so much to do with shaping the character of people and of nations.

We read history's pages and find that the nations which have been noted for the highest civilization and best government became such chiefly through the influence of their best teachers. Socrates, Plato and Aristotle, by teaching morality and virtue, gave to ancient Greece what it could have obtained in no other way. Their influence upon the character of that nation had an inestimable value. And so on down through the ages until the present time, the countries which have had the best schools and teachers, have been the best nations.

The influence of parents and home life should not be undervalued. Plato said, "That the Greek parents were more careful about the manners and morals of the youth than about his letters and music.

The same is true of parents to-day, for these are many whose greatest care is to "Train up the child in the way he should go."

Some will say that no other person can have so great an influence on the characters of children as the parents themselves. It is true that character building begins in the home. There the child receives his first knowledge of right and wrong; there the foundation of character is laid. But when we consider that no other person spends so much time with children as the teacher, we will not hesitate to say that his position as character builder is second to none, if not first. The Christian teacher who spends seven hours each day, five days each week, for nearly three-fourths of the year, with his pupils, can not fail to help them form habits which will be part of their character through life. And the time between the ages of six and twenty-one is more important as a character building period than the first six years of a child's life.

The first thought that enters the teacher's mind when a "new scholar" enters the school room is that concerning his character. His disposition and inclinations, good or bad, are soon discovered, and whether the foundation that has already been made, is one upon which the structure may be continued, or one which must be torn down and replaced must be decided by the teacher.

What numbers of little boys and girls are thus entering our schools each year. No two of them alike. Some from homes where the young mind has been carefully led in the right way. Do we teachers not owe it to parents to see that the precious material entrusted to us, shall be kept in the right way—pure and innocent? What if we are careless or negligent? Every word and act of ours has an influence either for good or for bad. How important that we should set examples that our pupils may follow with safety.

Our greatest task is that of setting right those, who come to us already spoiled. There are few children who have not several bad inclinations. Some are inclined to be deceitful or untruthful, and there is a "Dodd Weaver" in almost every school. This material is furnished us and it must be made into men and women of the highest character if possible. Our country looks to its schools for the men and women who are to rule the nation. The boys and girls who are now studying in our schools, will be the leaders and directors of our national affairs within thirty or forty years.

We can see then how much depends upon our work. The task is one which can be accomplished only by hard and patient labor. It must be done little by little. One stone laid upon another will at last complete the finest structure. So in the school-room, on the play-ground and in our homes, too, habits are formed which at last will be summed up into a character, for character is the sum of all our habits.

Bad habits must be torn away as soon as discovered and replaced by good ones. There is no better way of correcting an evil habit than by putting a good one in its place. Our pupils have a tendency to imitate us. Those having a desire for something higher and better look to us for examples. While they are yet children they have no rule of their own by which they can govern their conduct. Some one must teach them and guide them. We are all imitators to a great extent. Christians strive to imitate the life of Christ. We are ever looking to our superiors for some new lesson—something higher and purer. We would say then, that it is right to imitate, and would present to our pupils all the beautiful and noble lessons which history teaches.

Help them to become familiar with the lives of good men and women until they are filled with a desire to lead good and useful lives also. Lead them to see and love all that is beautiful and good in nature.

"The teacher of old" says Plato made poetry and music familiar to the souls of the youth that they might become more gentle and better men in speech and action. They looked carefully to virtuous habits. Socrates taught the beauty and necessity of virtue.

"In the elder days of art, builders wrought with greatest care each minute and unseen part." Let us do our work as well. "The law of the harvest is that we reap more than we sow; sow an act and we reap a habit; sow a habit and we reap a character; sow a character and we reap a destiny." We who have the destinies of these schools in our hands should be men and women of the purest motives, the noblest enthusiasm, the finest culture, and the most devoted Christian purpose.

Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.
"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
Dr. G. C. Osmond,
Lowell, Mass.

Castoria.
"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. Archer, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular product, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY,
