WILLIAM REILLY'S WIFE,

Formerly of this vicinity, Gets Washed on a Utah Preacher and after a alleged illicit love, shakes him—Mr. Reilly was well known in Red Cloud, having lived here for years.

THE HISTORY OF THE CASE.

It will surprise a great many people to learn that when Rev. Dr. W. D. Mabry left Salt Lake on May 31st, he went direct to Windsor, Ont.; that he waited there for Mrs. Reilly to join him, according to arrangements made before his departure; that when she changed her mind he followed her to Milford, Kan., where she was visiting her mother, and made a final attempt to see her, but without success.

After the arraignment of Dr. Mabry and Mrs. Reilly in the Third District Court, upon the serious charge of having violated the seventh commandment, interest in the case, so far as the general public was concerned, exhibited a tendency to lag, but it rallied with renewed vigor when it was announced exclusively in The Tribune one morning that Dr. Mabry had quietly left the city for Greenville, Ill., the home of his brother.

Upon the heels of Dr. Mabry's departure came a well-defined rumor that the gentleman had sought the sheltering shores of Canada, where he was impatiently awaiting the arrival of Mrs. Reilly.

Acting upon this rumor, The Tribune set to work to unravel the mystery that had up to that time so effectively baffled the most industrious attempts at solution. Whether or not its efforts in this direction were successful, the public is left to determine.

In the interval that had occurred between the arrest of Dr. Mabry and his departure from the city, Attorney W. C. Reilly had been putting forth every effort in his power to secure from his wife a complete history of her relations with the pastor, and shortly after Dr. Mabry left the city, he was rewarded by a statement from her which placed him in possession of the coveted information.

It appeared that Dr. Mabry had pursued Mrs. Reilly for nearly two years, constantly pouring into her ear the story of his passionate love and undying devotion, at times when he should have been discussing with her the welfare of her own soul.

Even after she had written him a most pitiful letter in which she declared that he had forced her to say things that were not dictated by her heart, and in which she said, "With God's help I intend to stick by my husband," like a master of hypnotic power he drew her back to him and added another link to the chain of their associations.

Prior to Mr. Mabry's departure, so Mr. Reilly says, the doctor and Mrs. Reilly had perfected their arrangements for an elopement. He had given her money with which to pay her fare to Windsor, Ont., where they were to meet, and had also made out a schedule upon which she was to travel, together with directions as to her department en route.

It might also be added that Mrs. Reilly intended going, but when her husband discovered this fact, he at once began to discourage her, and told her, among other things, that she was not the first woman into whose ear the reverend gentleman had poured the tale of his never-dying love.

This statement, together with certain proofs submitted by Mr. Reilly aroused Mrs. Reilly's suspicions, and she changed her mind.

In accordance with this determination, she did not leave for Windsor, Ontario, as previously arranged, but instead allowed her husband to dictate a letter to the doctor, which she wrote and signed, stating that it was impossible for her to leave Salt Lake at the time agreed upon. Several letters and telegrams then passed, Mr. Reilly reading those received from Mabry and dictating those sent to the doctor by his wife.

Finally, as more fully appears elsewhere, Mrs. Reilly recovered from her infatuation for the pastor, and decided to remain with her husband.

On June 17th, she left the city for Milford, Kan., on a visit to her mother having, in the meantime, written to the doctor at Windsor that it would be impossible for her to leave the city for several weeks.

The doctor learned, however, from some of his Salt Lake friends that Mrs. Reilly had left for Kansas, and taking one last long lingering look at the beautiful scenery which is so happily and graphically described in some of his letters, he packed his grip and turned his face toward the "Sunflower" State.

He arrived in Junction City, Kan., fourteen miles from Milford, so it is stated, on June 26th, and drove over to Milford. He did not see Mrs. Reilly, however, and later returned to Junction City, from which place he wrote her a cipher letter. In reply to this letter, Mrs. Reilly emphatically impressed it upon the pastor's mind that under no conditions would she see him or write to him again, adding that if he desired to say anything further to her, he could address her in care of her brother, W. W. Snyder of Milford, to whom she had told all.

Thwarted in his attempt to see Mrs. Reilly at Junction City, Dr. Mabry then proceeded to Kansas City, from which place he wrote her a lengthy letter, strikingly different in tone from the effusive epistles that had preceded it. This was the last letter received by Mrs. Reilly from Dr. Mabry, who, from Kansas City, proceeded to the home of his brother at Greenville, Ill., where he is presumed to be at present.

This, in brief, is a history of the now famous "Mabry case," but the entire story, inclusive of the letters that passed between Dr. Mabry and Mrs. Reilly, can best be told in the language of Mr. Reilly, who consented to be interviewed by a representative of The Tribune yesterday.

MRS. REILLY'S LETTER TO MABRY.

Doubtless you will be surprised to receive a letter from me. I started down to see you this afternoon, but was interrupted in that, as you well know. I can write it better and more with my pencil than I could if I were with you. First I want you to forgive all the pain this letter may cause you, for I really do believe you love me. I am going to be frank with you though you even hate me. You have forced me to say things that were not dictated by my heart. I did think a great deal of you at one time as a friend, but love you I know now, I never did. As to going away with you as you asked me to do and as I, lacking of courage, promised to do, please forget that I ever did promise such a thing. I know you will think me heartless but such is not the case, I can assure you. In fact I almost hate myself for being so weak when I am in your presence that I could not be frank with you and tell you that I did not love you well enough to give up all my friends, my mother, and my husband, although I do not love him as I ought to, to go away with you and shut myself up from the world. Oh, I could not do it, I have respected you, yes more than I can tell, for the manner in which you have always treated me, and at one time last summer I really thought I cared for you. But I know too well now that it is only a fancy. You have been so kind to turn the current in the church my way as you have, and I thank you for it. I know that with your generous heart you will still speak well of me. I am determined not to see you any more so do not call or do not try to see me any more. You know my heart now and you surely will not trespass on my weakness again. If you find room in your heart to forgive me after reading this letter let me know by giving me a good warm handshake the first chance you get. Have no fears that I will make love to any other man, for with God's help I mean to stick to my husband as long as it is possible for me to do so. I do not know what else I can say only to repeat, do not for Heaven's sake try to see me, and if you meet me on the street, I beg of you do not mention this subject. I am not to blame for not loving you. I am only to blame for not telling you so long ago, but when I heard you say so earnestly that it would ruin you if I ever gave you up I pitied you only, and told you that your love was reciprocated by me. Do not hate me for my weakness please, but rather pray for me that I may from now on be frank and sincere in what I say or do. I have written more than I would have dared to tell you, for my courage would have failed me, and I would have kept on lying to you, and it would have been making it harder for you all the time I will take this letter to your room at
