At the Iowa experiment station they have been making some tests in comparative feeding of cattle and sheep. The tests are not yet completed, but to date show very favorably for the sheep. The cost of one pound of gain in the month of January was for the sheep 3.32 and for the cattle 3.62 cents. This is, of course, not exactly a fair comparison, as sheep and cattle are very different in their methods of growth, the sheep growing more rapidly comparatively, but ceasing in their growth sooner.

English farmers use a great deal of oil meal in fattening their stock. One much quicker then they otherwise is 1.2 per cent,

The market for heavy horses is demanding an animal that weighs in the neighborhood of 1,700 or 1,800 pounds. It is useless to think of using a small mare to get such animals. If you are about to breed, start right and use mares heavy enough so that the foal may develop to the weight desired.

The Kansas experiment station has been experimenting with hogs sheltered and without shelter. The sheltered hogs made a gain of one pound of flesh for every five pounds of corn fed, but the unsheltered hogs made no gain at all. The station also refers to the necessity of having shelter in summer, as the animals suffer as well from too much heat as from too much cold.

The English cavalry has just had a review and 14,000 horses were mustered. This was supposed to be a good showing, but Sir Charles Dilke criticises them as being in many instances too young for military service, at least in a hard campaign. He said count horses that were less than six years of age, while many of these were only three and four years old.

The Sheep in the South.-Talking with a Montana stockman recently we learned that some of the great sheep owners of that state are looking to the more southern of the United States for a future feeding ground. One great obsticle, however, seems to confront them, and that is that the rain-fall in the south is so considerable that the sheep cannot be left out all winter would be a drawing and trembling of without shelter. This is one of the There are women who cannot toler the cords. Besides such torture, I things that makes the business lucrative in the far west. > Too Much Corn Fed .-- People more and more are demanding bacon and hams that have not too much fat on in the great butcher shops of Chicago that the dealers have the hardest work to get rid of the fat pork. This excessive fatness comes from feeding too much corn. People think that it makes no difference in selling hogs, but the market generally is affected. What makes Irish bacon the best in the world if it be not the food upon which the hogs are grown? Not having access to Indian corn, the Irish do not feel themselves obliged to feed it aitogether

Roots for Iowa Stock. Prof. James Wilson, of the Iowa station, in an address said: The questions are prominent whether we can maintain the excellence of imported animals without roots, and whether perfect health can be maintained easily without them in winter, and what can be most readily and profitably grown to it on faith. But with hog meat it was keep dairy cows in milk during Sep- not so. This points a moral: Produce tember and October drouths, such as we had last fall. In order that the have that meat uniformly good and it farmers of Iowa might get some facts regarding root growing, we have been growing different kinds during the two years we have been at Ames. Inquiry was rife whether the state could grow sugar beets profitably. We have grown two crops under rigid rule and careful note-taking, and find that the average per cent of sugar in the beet was 14.14, that the average tonnage per acre was 20, that the highest tonnage per acre was 28, that clay soils give the highest per cent of sugar, that subsoiling gave the best shaped beets, that early planting is every way better, and that no fertilizer we could buy gave us any benefit. We have had most success and profit from growing mangles for stock. They are healthy, hardy and yield well. They are valuable for cows, keep well, and are very acceptable to cattle of all kinds. The harder varieties of turnips Headache, foul breath, sour stomach, heart-are good for stock, but seem to be liable burn, pain in chest, dyspepsia, constipation. to insect rayages and do not uniformly give the amount of feed per acre that give the amount of feed per acre that mangles do. > Market Demands Lighter Hogs .-There was a time when the market paid the top prices for heavy hogs, hogs that weighed between 300 and 400 pounds, but that day has gone forever. There has been a gradual decline through a long series of years till now in the west a 250 pound hog and in the east even as low as 150 pound hog is the kind demanded. This is to the advantage of the feeder, for he can produce that kind of a hog at less price. It is to the advantage of the consumer because he is surer of getting the lean meat he wants,

Pork Is Popular .- We heard a gentieman say recently that he was prejudiced against pork, but that nevertheless he bought a great deal of it for his home use. His reason for this was that he nearly always got pork that was tender, and if it was too fat he could find it out before buying it. When he bought beef he often found it not what he had expected. Sometimes it was tender and sometimes it had no flavor, and the worst was that be had to buy the quality in any kind of meat and will find a ready and extensive market.
