2825 Keeley St.,
Chicago, Ill., Oct. 2, 1902.
I suffered with falling and congestion of the womb, with severe pains through the groins. I suffered terribly at the time of menstruation, had blinding headaches and rushing of blood to the brain. What to try I knew not, for it seemed that I had tried all and failed, but I had never tried for sick women. I found it pleasant to take and soon knew that I had the right medicine. New blood seemed to course through my veins and after using eleven bottles I was a well woman.

Mrs. Bush

Mrs. Bush is now in perfect health because she took Wine of Cardui for menstrual disorders, bearing down pains and blinding headaches when all other remedies failed to bring her relief. Any sufferer may secure health by taking Wine of Cardui in her home. The first bottle convinces the patient she is on the road to health.

The Mob's Version.

That a knowledge of spelling was not the strong point of the London populace 100 years ago is shown in an episode in that city at the time the peace with France was being celebrated. M. Otto, the French ambassador, had erected the words "Peace and Concord" on a sign before his residence. The mob understood that this was quite the same as "peace and conquered." It insisted on the objectionable word being removed. In the place of "concord" "amity" was erected, and, curious to say, the crowd, un-intelligent enough to think "concord" meant "conquered," did not think that "amity" might mean "enmity."

True Greatness.

True greatness, first of all, is a thing of the heart. It is all alive with robust and generous qualities. It is neither behind its age nor too far before it. It is up with its age, and ahead of it only just so far as to be able to lead its march. It cannot slumber, for activity is a necessity of its existence. It is no reservoir, but a fountain.—Roswell D. Hitchcock.

CREW SOME INDIAN CHARM

The Loss Led the Cheyenne Braves to Leave the Warpath.

Of all the gruesome things in the national museum the necklace presented several years ago by Captain John C. Burke of the United States army stands unequalled as a monument to human cruelty and superstition. This necklace consists first of all of a long buckskin cord made by rolling up a strip of skin and sewing it along the border so that throughout its entire length it will measure something over an inch in circumference, or about a third of an inch in diameter. This cylinder of buckskin is covered with beadwork so that no part of the skin is exposed. The beads are sewed on in rather tasteful patterns, the colors of which are white and blue. A thin buckskin string is attached to either end of this thick, bead-encrusted cord, by means of which the cylinder is tied about the neck of the wearer.

Hanging from the underside of this necklace and running throughout its entire length are twelve human fingers and several small flint arrowheads of peculiar shape and workmanship attached by buckskin strings. In the middle of the necklace depend three small medicine bags made of the tanned hide or skin of human beings. These bags contain charm stones and other paraphernalia of the medicine man.

The human fingers, forming the most conspicuous feature of the necklace, are complete, having been cut off between the middle joint and the knuckle. They have been dried in such manner as to preserve their natural color, finger nails, etc., and look as fresh as though they had been removed only a few hours.

During General Crook's campaign against the Sioux and Cheyennes in 1870 the Fourth cavalry and a detachment of Indian scouts under Colonel R. C. Mackenzie surprised and stormed the chief town and principal stronghold of the Cheyennes. During or, rather, after this engagement one of the Indian scouts, Baptiste Pouvier, better known as Big Bat, entered the lodge of the chief medicine man of the deserted village, and among other things that the medicine man had overlooked in his hurried flight from the town the scout found this curious necklace. Big Bat gave the necklace to Colonel Burke, who later turned it over to a student of Indian religions and superstitions, and he in turn presented it to the National museum.

Subsequently something of the history of this necklace was learned. The fingers were those of famous enemies noted for their superior courage and bravery whom the Cheyennes had killed in battle during their various wars, while the human skin of which the medicine bags were made was also taken from the bodies of enemies slain in battle. The necklace is very old and was looked upon by the Cheyennes as a thing endowed with miraculous powers. Prior to its capture by Big Bat it had belonged to a famous medicine man of that tribe, who had never allowed any white man to lay eyes on it, and its loss put to a very sudden and abrupt end to the Cheyenne war. The Cheyennes tried hard to get it back, offering a large sum of money and a great many horses for its return, but this was refused, and since then the Cheyennes have remained at peace with the whites.—Washington Post.

NOT BENT ON CRUSHING UNIONS.

Omaha Business Men's Association Corrects a False Impression.

Omaha, June 9.—An impression seems to have gone out through various channels that the Business Men's association, recently organized in Omaha, is bent on crushing out the labor unions of this city and is affiliated in some way with a national body similarly intended to organized labor. A statement recently issued by the authority of the Omaha Business Men's association denies this completely, and further shows that even in the closest meetings of the association the speeches of members have always been marked by the most respectful attitude toward the laboring man, and not a word has been said that would suffer from public repetition.

The conference between the labor leaders and the special committee of the Business Men's association that was called by Governor Mickey brought out a clear and emphatic statement of the position of the two bodies, as shown by the stenographic report, which has just been transmitted. It has been obtained in some quarters that this conference was barren of results, but the exact alignment of positions obtained through it should afford considerable satisfaction, even if no advance was made toward arbitration of the dispute.

This conference seems early to have settled down to an effort on the part of Hon. T. J. Mahoney, the attorney of the Business Men's association, to pin the representatives of labor to a definite and explicit statement of the position and aims of the strike then on in Omaha. In this he seems to have succeeded very well, though at times calling upon himself expostulations from Mr. Bek, the president of the Central Labor union, who insisted that he was not a witness to be cross-questioned, and that Mr. Mahoney used very harsh terms in denigrating their position.

In the first place Mr. Mahoney stated to the conference that the Business Men's association had never questioned the right of the laboring man to organize in unions, nor did they now question the rights of such unions to exist, but he wished to establish the corollary of this by ascertaining whether the representatives of labor there present would also acknowledge the right of existence to unorganized labor. This right was thereupon admitted by Mr. Bek and his associates, but they stoutly maintained the union men could not be expected to associate with or work alongside of nonunion men. They would not deny the right of employers to hire nonunion men, but they would insist that such men at once make application to enter the union. Asked if that did not result in forcing all employees into union ranks, thus really driving out the nonunion men, the reply was made that they had no desire to crush him, they "only wanted to get hold of him and talk to him and make a man of him."

It was finally brought out, however, and in most unequivocal terms, that the representatives of the labor unions present would never be willing to submit to arbitration the three salient points of the dispute: (1) The right of the employer to hire both union and nonunion men without discrimination; (2) the use of the boycott, and (3) the sympathetic strike. They insisted that these were their weapons (and perfectly legitimate weapons) in their warfare against the nonunion man; as they expressed it, "warfare against the man who resists the onward march of organized labor." It was further maintained with considerable show of effrontery that in the laboring world the majority is to rule and the minority must eventually yield. Finally Mr. Bek declared, quite boldly, "The time has gone by in this material when the individual has any very maternal rights left."

On the part of the Business Men's association, on the other hand, the point was clearly made that they do not refuse to grant to the unions that much sought for "recognition." If such recognition implies simply an acknowledgment of their legal existence, or even an agreement to settle disputes by arbitration, the Business Men's officers or committees representing such unions; but the association, in common with similar bodies of business men in Denver, Kansas City, Chicago, New York and other cities, does refuse to "recognize" the unions in the sense in which it can be accomplished only by signing contracts in which the employer is pledged to employ union men exclusively and to refuse supplies, merchandise or service to any individual, firm or corporation that may be pronounced at any time "unfair" by the unions.

The kernel of the whole dispute seems to lie in this. The union men believe, or pretend they believe, that their unions are in a position to displace if they concede these principles to their employers. The latter, who absolutely refusing to surrender to such dictatorship, have endeavored to point out that there will still be left much for organized labor to accomplish in this world of cut-throat competition. The union men, both the employees and the employers' ends of the entire business of the community.

This position was voiced recently by a well known business man of Omaha, who said: "Where would this sort of thing lead us? It would lead us out into a strike? It would result in a form of oil garchy, in which the dictators would be a few men sitting behind a table in Labor Temple, a little government within the government, issuing their mandates to the business men, the bankers, the lawyers, the moneyed men, the statesmen of Nebraska. Not a laborer could find work who did not belong to a union; nor could he, on the other hand, belong to a union unless that union saw fit to accept him. Nor could any employer offer work unless he agreed to abide by all the rules that the union might create, of the justice and equity of which the union should be the sole arbiter."

The daily press of Omaha has attempted to cloud the issue. By a string of headlines and juggling with the facts, these papers have given out the impression, for reasons best known to themselves, that in many cases the strikes had been won by the men, and that in other instances the "scale" had been "against" by the employers. Such defections have only occurred among the smaller establishments and have not in any way affected the general result. The terms on which the vast majority of strikers have returned to work in Omaha indicate a complete surrender of their demands. Indeed, there have been no terms at all, except that the men take their places and continue their employment as before, wages not having seemed to them a matter for negotiation. The Business Men's association has not been jarred in the least. It is by all odds the most representative body of employers ever gotten together in Omaha for any purpose, and it stands along the same lines as the famous Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben. So far it has been very ably manned, developing from day to day greater strength of purpose and a clearer knowledge of what it is about. The meetings are maintained with regularity, secrecy and strict attendance. The business men of Omaha seem to have adopted as their working principle the now famous declaration found in the report of the anthracite coal strike commission, as follows:

"The right to remain at work when others have ceased to work, or to engage anew in work which others have abandoned, is part of the personal liberty of a citizen that can never be surrendered, and every infringement thereof should be met by the stern, denunciation of the law."

Drug Clerk Unnecessarily Alarmed Over Demand for Poison.

He entered the drug store with his lips set, and a look in his eye that denoted a determination that was desperate.

"I want some paris green," he said hoarsely, "right away! I can't wait. They shall die this very day!"

The drug clerk spared for time as he worked his way to the telephone to call up the police department. "All right, sir," he said, "but it will take a little while to prepare it."

"Nonsense!" said the man, "I will prepare it. They are ready to end their existence. Give me the poison!"

The drug clerk paled and pressed the button for the porter.

"Yes, yes," he said, "how many do you intend to kill?"

"About a million!" The clerk paled again. "Heavens," he exclaimed to himself, "the man is not only a would-be murderer, but a maniac as well!"

Then he added aloud: "Are you going to annihilate children and women as well?"

"Children and women?" said the desperate man. "Who said anything about children and women? I'm after the bugs on my roses. Is that stuff ready yet?"

CAN IT BE POSSIBLE?

"Pure Fruit Jelly" Said to Be Manufactured From Old Boots.

France is not the only nation that knows how to practice economies. Scraps and shavings of the iron mills and forges, once thought too small for consideration, are now turned into writing ink and into that beautiful dye color, Prussian blue. Fuel oil, a dangerous poison, becomes oil of apples or pears, for flavoring purposes.

Beggars' rags are turned into pilots' coats, and the seemingly worthless sawdust into newspapers. Even as the unsavory drainage of the cow barns becomes a basis for the most fashionable perfumery, and the tar waste of our gas works is turned into the most exquisite aniline dyes and into saccharine, the sweetest of all substances. Old boot legs, soles and uppers, bits of harness and the hoofs, tendons and like worthless scraps of our butcher shops, chemically treated and colored and flavored with the products of equally "useless" truck, find their way to the best tables as "pure fruit jellies," says a writer in Popular Mechanics. Such is the American method of inventive economy.
