An Unpleasant Office.

The task assigned to the bellboy at a small New England hotel was no sneucre, and he realized it, for the old gentleman who had requested that he be wakened for an early breakfast was extremely deaf.

"I don't know what I'll do about the man in No. 41 that wanted to go off on the 7 o'clock train," the bellboy announced breathlessly to the proprietress.

"Haven't you waked him up yet?" demanded that brisk person.

"I've waked him three times," said the boy sulkily, "but he hasn't heard me yet. Everybody else has, though, on that floor. I know, because they've all hollered to me to stop battering on their doors."—Youth's Companion.
